Coal Conference Still Deadlocked On Eve of Strike

No Agreement in Sight as Miners, Operators Debate 10 Hours.

Roosevelt May Ask A New Extension

400,000 Men Are Ready to Walk Out of Mines This Morning.

The conference between representatives of bituminous coal miners, who are threatening to strike, and the operators broke up at 7 o'clock last night, but neither side would state immediately what was the outcome of the negotiations. Instead, they milled around the ballroom of a hotel, as if waiting for word from outside.

They will resume their conference at 9 p. m.

By Felix Bruner.

After 10 hours of continuous discussion, representatives of the United Mine Workers of America and coal-mine operators still were far from agreement last night on renewal of their wage and hour contract.

As midnight, the hour when the present agreement expires, approached, it appeared that nothing would be done to prevent a strike in the bituminous mines, affecting 400,000 workers, the largest number ever involved in a single labor union walkout in this country.

Edward F. McGrady, assistant Secretary of Labor, was meeting with the workers and employers at the Shoreham. He was in frequent telephone communication with President Roosevelt at Hyde Park. The weight of the Administration has frequently been thrown into the balance against a mine walkout during the last few months, but many of those involved felt that even presidential interference would not be effective this time.

Officials of the United Mine Workers were prepared, if an agreement was not reached by midnight, to send messages to local union presidents in every soft coal producing State in the country telling them that the workers should not go to the mines today. Crews will be kept on pumps and ventilating equipment to maintain the mines, but no coal will be dug on property where union contracts have been in effect.

It was expected that if the deadlock continued President Roosevelt might send a personal message to the meeting asking that there be no strike. Five times already the strike has been postponed through extension of the contract at the request of the Administration. The last time was a week ago.

The miners are asking for wage

Lewis Accorded Chance to Live

Physicians Fight to Save Senator Critically Ill in Moscow.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Sept. 22.—Members of Senator J. Hamilton Lewis' party said today that if infection were prevented from spreading to his left lung the Illinois Senator had a good chance of recovery.

The statement was taken to indicate Senator Lewis, who was stricken wth bronchial pneumonia during a visit to Moscow, is in a serious condition.

The Senator had a restless night but today his condition was reported as unchanged.

Dr. Adolf S. Rumreich, of the American Embassy, is in daily attendance on Senator Lewis together with Russian doctors.

The latter include specialists from the Kremlin and the Moscow Botkin Hospital.

The American Embassy offered the Senator quarters in the Embassy building but it was decided not to move him from his hotel in his present condition. The services of an English-speaking nurse were obtained, and the physicians planned a special consultation tonight.

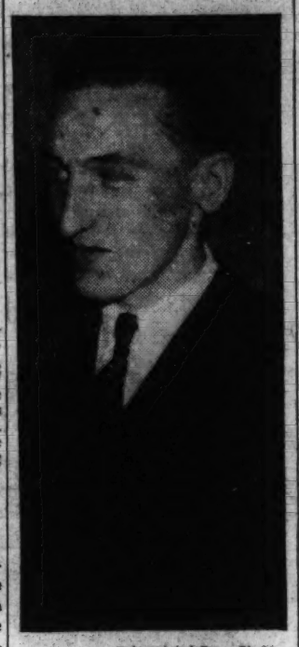

Besides Mrs. Lewis, her niece, Mrs. Donald Jelks, of Jacksonville, Fla., and the latter's daughter, Betty, were in the Lewis party which came here from Berlin.

Boswitz, about 31, was killed almost instantly, while Rosenthal, 32, died en route to a Memphis hospital. Rosenthal was believed to have been at the controls.

3 Escape Death As Plane Falls At Berwyn, Md.

Two Are in Hospital After Ship Nose-Dives From 1,400 Feet.

Three men escaped death when their airplane nose-dived from a height of 1,400 feet and crashed on the edge of a road on the outskirts of Berwyn, Md., late yesterday.

Fritz Schrom, 25, owner of a chicken farm in Berwyn, who was flying the plane, emerged from the wreckage with only a few scratches.

Two colored men who were his passengers, however, were brought to Casualty Hospital by the Bladensburg Rescue Squad. They were:

Charles Ash, 28, of Brentwood, an amateur flier, who suffered broken ankles, a broken nose and cuts and bruises on the face.

James Baker, 29, of Brentwood, a plasterer making his first flight, who suffered cuts on his right leg and right elbow and contusions on the face.

The plane, according to Ash, had taken off from an emergency landing field near Bowie, Md., and had just passed over Berwyn when the motor stalled. Then, he said, the plane dived to the earth.

Questioned at Casualty Hospital, Ash and Baker said they remembered nothing after the crack-up.

Schrom, who got his transport pilot's license six months ago, was taken to the home of Dr. R. A. Bennett, at Riverdale, Md., and treated for cuts and bruises.

Baker took the accident lightly, "It was the first time I'd gone up," he said. "Ash had been after me for months to go up with him. When he came back from a flying lesson, he asked me to go up and I did. I kind of liked it. I don't think I'd mind going up again."

Ocean Flier Forced Down In Ireland

Waitkus Is Uninjured as Storms Halt Hop Short of Goal.

Bound for Lithuania, He Loses Way in Fog; Cracks Up.

By the Associated Press.

Ballinrobe, County Mayo, Ireland, Sept. 22.—The transatlantic solo flight of Felix Waitkus, 28-year-old Wisconsin aviator, ended today in a smashup in a rough field, but the flier was uninjured.

Fog-bound and buffeted by storms along the Irish coast, Waitkus, who had hoped to fly nonstop from New York to Kaunas, Lithuania, brought his white and orange plane down in a hazardous landing.

Bouncing across the uneven field, the machine struck a tree and was badly damaged. But Waitkus, whom frantic villagers expected to find dead, climbed out of the wreckage and said he felt lucky to escape without a scratch.

Had Been Flying Blind.

"I had been flying blind for a long time," he asserted. "I had bad visibility all over the Atlantic and when I reached the coast I ran into storms and fogs.

"I tried at first to make Baldonnel airdrome near Dublin and then headed for the Ballinrobe drome, but I couldn't find it.

"I was delighted to see land for I was feeling very tired and my stock of gasoline was getting a bit low."

Waitkus' plane had been sighted over Headford, County Galway, on the west coast of the Irish Free State, about half an hour before the crash, which occured at 10 a. m. (4 a. m., Eastern standard time).

Unhurt but stiff from confinement in the pilot seat during his harrowing trip over the sea, the Kohler, Wis., aviator crawled from the plane and testing his legs, was taken to a Ballinrobe Hotel where he went to bed.

Villagers Alarmed.

The roar of an airplane engine, shattering the Sunday morning calm, aroused the villagers as Waitkus zoomed down for a landing. They flocked to the field fearing to find him dead and remained to congratulate him on his narrow escape.

Despite tthe bad weather, Waitkus made good time for the transatlantic crossing. He has been in the air less than 22 hours when coast guardsmen at Headford saw his plane.

Waitkus took off from Floyd Bennett Field, New York, at 5:45 a. m. Eastern standard time Saturday in face of reports of extremely poor weather off Newfoundland.

The flight was planned primarily to commemorate the flight of Stephen Darius and Stanley Girenas, who were killed in a crash 375 miles short of their Kaunas goal two years ago.

It was sponsored by the Chicago-Lithuanian newspaper, Naujienas, and the American-Lithuanian Transatlantic Flight Association.

His plane was damaged so badly, Waitkus said, that it must be moved to Dublin for repairs.

"I am anxious to take off again for Lithuania," he said.

"The radio direction calls from Athlone (an Irish station) saved my

School Is Open Today: Hooray, Cry Girls; Boys Think It Jail

Thousands of little girls in Washington are going to a party this morning while thousands of little boys are going to jail. That's the first day of school, as it seems to 82,000 youngsters all over the city.

With freshly starched dresses and brand new hair ribbons to show off; with summer secrets to giggle about in cloak rooms and exciting new friendships to make between classes, the girls can hardly wait for the fall term to begin today. They think school is nice. At least that's the way they feel about it for the first few days before the novelty has worn off.

For the boys there is no novelty even in the first few minutes. To them school is a pain and they didn't hesitate yesterday to say so in emphatic and colorful language since there were no teachers around. Some of the bolder ones went so far as to stand in front of the buildings and make dubious salutes to show their disgust for the whole situation. But that was yesterday. Today they all will straggle to their seats with little outward show of the turmoil going on within them.

Of course a few of the lads who are entering upon their first experience in the classroom regard it as an adventure. How can they help it when their mothers see them off as if they were leaving for Ethiopia? But these are kindergartens or first graders and their zest for eduaction is pathetic and maddening by turns to any boy who has negotiated enything above the 2B.

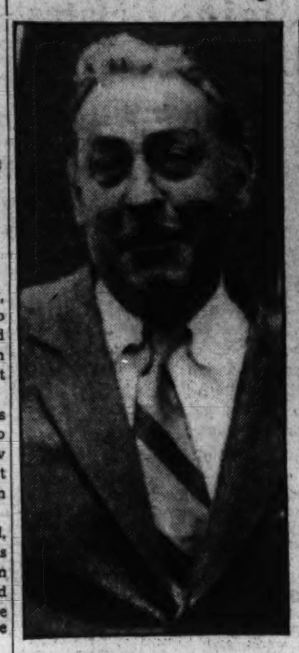

The attitude of mothers toward the opening of school contains something of the feelings of both the boys and girls. There is gladness and sadness; gladness over getting the children out from under foot again for the better part of the day, sadness over the responsibility of having breakfast always on time, of seeing that Junior takes seriously those directions about neck-washing and of keeping an interesting supply of hair ribbons on hand for Mary Anne.

The thing nobody seems able to learn with any degree of certainty about the first day of school is what fathers and teachers think of it.

Although the majority of the 82,000 pupils are not expected to report at their buildings until 9 a. m. today, several hundred have been ordered to put in an appearance at 8:45. These are boys and girls who will be scattered among several schools until their own new building, the Anacostia Senior-Junior High, is ready for occupancy, November 1. They are to report 15

Elaine Barrie's Story Of 'Love' and Reason For Barrymore Chase

JOHN BARRYMORE.

Associated Press Photos.
ELAINE BARRIE.

Says Actor Had Feared Efforts to Separate Them and Asked Her to Follow Him; Believes He Will Come Back to Her; Manager the 'Villain.'

By the United Press.

New York, Sept. 22.—The Barrymore-Barrie December and May romance will bloom again in New York soon, the 20-year-old admirer of the aging actor confidently said tonight.

Miss Barrie, born Jacobs and who changed her name to Barrie as token of her love for John Barrymore, was near exhaustion. She had just returned from a fruitless three-day chase of Barrymore by train, plane and taxi half way across the continent.

The object of her ardent affections eluded her in Kansas City Saturday and tonight was nearing Los Angeles by train.

Elaine, whose extreme nervousness was evident beneath a pose of smiling composure, explained that Barrymore had anticipated efforts to keep them apart and that he previously had told her to follow him. Henry Hotchener, the much married great lover's business manager, was the villain in the piece.

Says She Got Message.

"I decided to turn back in Kansas City when I received information it would be futile for me to continue West at this time," Miss Barrie said.

"Also information that in a short time this would all be quietly cleared up."

"Do you mean the romance will be resumed?" she was asked.

"That's right," she smilingly replied.

"Here?"

"Yes."

So confident was the striking brunette, whose smile is appealing, that she declined to send a message to Barrymore through the newspapers, although she had appealed to him by radio in Kansas City yesterday.

"Perhaps you would want to tell him you are waiting for him," she was prompted. "I believe he knows that," she said, a smile emphasizing a wide mouth heavily rouged.

The girl, who met Barrymore while he was ill in a hospital here, had dark circles under her eyes. So did her mother, Mrs. Edna Jacobs, and the circles came from fatigue of the chase after Barrymore, not out of a cosmetics box.

She was guarded and her every word watched by her mother, her attorney, Aaron Sapiro, and a hefty blond "friend of the family" from Los Angeles who said his name was Ned Armour and his business was "none of your business."

Elaine did manage to say, however, during a carefully coached account of her trip, that she planned no legal action against Barrymore, would be in bed before the reporter could get to the elevator and would be on the stage "in the very near future." She and Barrymore planned joint stage and radio appearances recently on a yachting trip to Havana.

Dolores Cold to Him.

They were on this cruise when Dolores Costello Barrymore, his third wife and mother of his two children, sued for divorce. If his present dash West is to seek a reconciliation, it is time wasted, Mrs. Barrymore said yesterday.

Miss Barrie wore a woolen wine-colored dress, trimmed in dull gold metal ornaments. Her only jewelry was a yellow gold open-work bracelet. The 8-caret diamond solitaire Barrymore gave her "to seal their engagement" and took back when they quarrelled, still was missing.

She said Barymore's manager "bodily threw her out" when she attempted to enter the actor's compartment on the Twentieth Century Limited at Chicago, disguised with spectacles and pencil as a reporter.

"The train officials said he wasn't

Zog Grants Clemency To All But 1 in Revolt

Tirana, Albania, Sept. 22 (AP).—King Zog today granted clemency to all but one of more than 40 persons condemned to death for participation in last month's short-lived revolt at Fieri.

The King ordered them imprisoned for various terms, but refused to halt the execution of Hekuran Manekie, convicted of killing Gen. Ghilardi in a surprise attack at Fieri. Manekie also was accused of two previous murders.

Twenty thousand spectators were turned away from Wrigley Field in Chicago yesterday and missed seeing the Cubs register their eighteenth straight victory. Pittsburgh was the victim and Larry French scattered the visitors' nine hits so effectively he ended the game with a 2-to-0 shutout to his credit.

The still-hopeful Cardinals gained in the race despite the victory as they took a double-header from the Cincinnati Reds and cut Chicago's lead to three games. Hits were cheap in the opening contest and St. Louis emerged on top, 14-4. Some masterful pitching by the temperamental Dizzy Dean accounted for the second game, 3-1.

The Nats stayed off a last-place threat in no uncertain fashion when they blasted two games from the Philadelphia Athletics, present cellar-holders. With line-ups replete with rookies they won, 10-2 and 11-1. Two games also fell to the lot of the Yankees who Saturday lost all mathematical hopes of winning the American pennant. Detroit, the champion, was shutout by a rookie St. Louis pitcher, 1-0.

New Yorkers Plan 1939 World Fair

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 22.—A world's fair to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the establishment of the United States Government and the inauguration of George Washington was planned today for New York City in 1939-1940.

The fair will be remodelled after the recent Chicago exposition. Preliminary plans have been developed by a steering committee of prominent citizens.

Mayor LaGuardia has promised his and the city's whole-hearted cooperation," the committee said, and President Roosevelt expressed interest, adding:

"I hope you will keep me in touch with the decisions and plans."

Federal support will be sought. The proposed fair would be held on a site tentatively selected at Flushing Bay in Queens Borough.

2 Die, 8 Hurt On Road; Boy Hit By Train

Heart Attack Is Fatal, Adding Third Death to Traffic Toll.

Passenger Loses Arm as Transit Co. Buses Collide Here.

Two persons were killed, one met death indirectly, four were seriously injured and three suffered minor hurts yesterday in the metropolitan area as the result of a series of collisions between automobiles, motor vans and buses and the crashing of a trunk into a tree. A 12-year-old orphan lad was critically injured when he walked into the path of a Baltimore & Ohio work train.

The dead are:

Ted Burrell, 26, of Greensboro, N. C.

Joseph Self, 28, of Milford, Va.

Mrs. Sarah Andrews, 51, of Bowling Green, Va.

The injured are:

N. W. Tabor, 39, 1138 Seventh street northeast, who lost an arm when two Capital Transit buses collided yesterday afternoon at Twenty-second street and Bunker road northeast.

Charles Stuart, 12-year-old ward of the Board of Catholic Charities, who suffered a fractured skull, punctured lungs and internal injuries when struck shortly before noon by a work train near Brentwood.

Two Vans Collide.

Fred Lofiin, 23, of Denton, N. C., who suffered numerous lacerations about the head and face when a van he was driving collided with a van driven by Burrell.

Self was fatally injured early yesterday at Bowling Green when an ice truck he was driving crashed into a tree. John Mattox, 26, of Bowling Green, traveling with Self, was thrown from the truck, but suffered only slight injuries.

Mrs. Andrews died from a heart attack when she heard Mrs. Self, a neighbor, screaming over news of the accident. The victim of the heart attack died before physicians arrived.

Self was taken to Mary Washington Hospital, Fredericksburg, where he died at 10 a. m. yesterday.

Bus Ride Costs Arm.

The collision which caused Burrell's death occurred on U. S. Route 1, 9 miles south of Fredericksburg, about 6 a. m. The express van he was driving ran head-on into the van driven by Lofiin. Burrell was alone.

With Lofiin was Boyd Daniel, 19, of Liberty, N. C., who escaped injury when he was thrown into the highway from an improvised bed of blankets in the rear of the vehicle. Lofiin was taken to Mary Washington Hospital. His conditoin was said not to be serious.

Tabor, who suffered amputation of his left arm at the shoulder yesterday afternoon as a result of the bus collision in Washington's section, was one of three passengers in a bus bound for Hyattsville and driven by Paul W. Baker, 27, of 1138 Seventh street northeast, the same address as that of the victim.

The Hyattsville bus was crossing Twenty-second street and another Capital Transit bus, on the Brookland route, was making a U turn when the two vehicles ran into each Jews Give Million.

Jerusalem, Sept. 22 (Palcor Agency).—The total amount contributed by Jews throughout the world, as of August 31, to aid the settlement of German Jews in Palestine was $1,187,500, according to a report covering the period since September, 1933, issued today by Dr. Georg Landauer, secretary of the Central Bureau for the Settlement of German Jews in Palestine.

Roosevelt, Back Today, Faces Relief, Coal, War Problems

Faced by a multiplicity of problems, President Roosevelt will return to the White House this morning, where he will remain for several days before starting on his trip to the Pacific Coast.

Among the principal problems awaiting the President are relief, the bituminous coal labor situation, and the part to be taken by the United States in the international situation. His first immediate act will be a talk to leaders of the annual campaign for the mobilization of human needs.

President Roosevelt has been spending much of his time in Hyde Park in consideration of the relief problem, with the resulting alteration of his $4,880,000,000 works program. He still is faced with the task of putting about 63,000 persons to work every day between now and November 1, if the goal of putting 3,500,000 persons to work by that date is to be met.

With the program constantly changing, now resembling only remotely the plan originally set up, the President must decide on future moves within the next few days.

The bituminous coal situation was in such an indefinite stage last night that it was impossible to foresee what problems may face the Administration, but it is certain that whatever happens the Government will play a part.

In connection with the international situation, the President must take part in setting into operation the recently enacted neutrality law. Particularly, he must determine the time when the arms embargo becomes effective in case of war.

The President also may appoint a successor to Joseph P. Kennedy, who resigned last week, as chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Yesterday, according to the Associated Press, President Roosevelt unveiled a tablet to the first settlers of the community surrounding Hyde Park. The tablet is in the St. James Episcopal Church, the old Roosevelt family worshiping place. President Roosevelt was accompanied by Mrs. Roosevelt and his mother, Mrs. James Roosevelt.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt will return to Washington to find the White House still in the process of being repaired. Water and electricity have been turned off, but arrangements have been made to restore the service temporarily until the President leaves on his trip. Most of the repair work is going on in the kitchen and lower floors. Private living quarters on the second and third floors have not been disturbed.

League Notified Of Italy's Terms On African Peace

Submits New Demands

BARON POMPEO ALOISI.

'Minimum Basis' Covers Land Grant, Control of Ethiopian Army.

Geneva Awaiting Verdict of Britain

Acceptance of Offer in Present Form Viewed as Doubtful.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Geneva, Sept. 22.—Premier Benito Mussolini was reported tonight to have notified the League of Nations the conditions on which he is prepared to abandon his military campaign against Ethiopia.

Baron Pompeo Aloisi, Italian delegate, was said to have conveyed to Chairman Salvadore de Madariaga of the League committee of five the following "minimum conditions of settlement:"

1. Eritrea and Italian Somaliland must be connected territorially by cession to Italy of a large section of western Ethiopia.

2. If Ethiopia is to have an outlet to the sea it must be through an Italian port in Eritrea on the north or Somaliland on the south.

3. A considerable part of Ethiopia's army must be demobilized and disarmed and the remainder placed under control of Italian commanders.

Baron Aloisi is understood to have expressed to the committee Premier Mussolini's "observations" that the committee's proposals, rejected by the Italian cabinet Saturday, referred to reorganization of the Ethiopian police and gendarmerie, but failed to mention the army.

This was the first substantial justification of Italian protestations that behind Mussolini's refusal of yesterday lay a willingness to consider more generous terms.

Look to Britain.

League members now look to Britain for indication of her attitude toward Il Duce's bid for a bigger deal in Ethiopia.

Failure of the committee of five's peace proposals to meet Italian aspirations is attributable in part to the stiff attitude taken by Capt. Anthony Eden in the final committee sessions.

Britain, likewise, has taken the lead in laying the groundwork for League sanctions if Italy makes unprovoked attack upon Ethiopia. Sir Samuel Hoare's address to the League Assembly was a strong plea for collective support of the Covenant and the massing of a bristling line of British warships from Gibraltar to Suez is an even stronger hint that John Bull doesn't want to humor Mussolini if the latter is unwilling to be "reasonable."

Many doubt Britain will consent to expanding the offer to meet Mussolini's demands. Proposals which would satisfy Il Duce probably would be viewed as violating the Covenant's guarantee to protect Ethiopia's sovereignty. Also they would give Italy a strategic foot-

Officials Say Ship Massing Is Due to Anti-British Drive by Papers.

London, Sept. 22.—The British government officially planned full responsibility for its rapidly increasing naval and military concentrations in the Mediterranean Sea squarely upon the controlled Italian press tonight.

The foreign office, shortly after Prime Minister Baldwin had cut short his week-end at Chequers to return to Downing street, issued a communique stating the unprecedented massing of warships from Haifa to Gibraltar and the increasing land and aerial defenses at such points as Malta and Gibraltar was caused by "the violence of the campaign against the United Kingdom" in Italy.

As all members of the British cabinet gathered in London for their first full meeting since August 27, official assurances were received from Rome that Premier Mussolini has not yet slammed the door on further attempts at conciliation of his dispute with Ethiopia.

The critical full-dress session of the cabinet was set definitely for Tuesday.

The foreign office communique, which officially blamed Il Duce's press for the British Mediterranean precautions, stated:

2 Held in Death Of D.C. Woman

Men Named in 'Suicide' Note of Miss Jordan Are Arrested.

Two men are being held for a coroner's inquest in the apparent suicide yesterday of Evelyn Jordan, 23, who is alleged to have shot herself at 419 New Jersey avenue northwest.

Fred G. Taylor, 52, of the New Jersey avenue address, and Harry P. Frye, 37, 825 Massachusetts avenue northwest, were arrested shortly after the body of the girl was discovered in the room. They are being held under open charges.

A note left by Miss Jordan, who lives with her mother, Mrs. Ida Purdy, 1600 Gales street northeast, mentioned three men and asked police to notify any of the men. On one side of the paper the note read, "if anything happens to me" while on the other it said, "when anything happens to me." Police refused to divulge the rest of the contents of the note.

The Jordan girl was found dying with a bullet wound in her left side on the third floor by Mrs. Blanche Gilmore, the landlady. Although she was not found until after midnight an investigation disclosed that she had been lying wounded for more than six hours. She was dead when she reached Casualty Hospital.

The inquest will be held Wednesday at 11:30 a. m.

10-Hour Debate Fails to Break Coal Deadlock

Increases and reduction of hours which would cost the operators about $40,000,000 annually. The operators have countered with demands for lower wages.

When the present wage and hour contract expired last spring, officials representing the union and those representing some of the operators said that if the Godfrey act, establishing a "little NRA" for the soft coal industry, should be enacted a settlement could be reached. The strike was postponed several times awaiting enactment of the bill.

Now that the bill had been enacted and enforcement personnel has been named, many operators still feel that the future of their business is too uncertain to justify them in making wage commitments. A powerful group of operators is opposing the measure and they expect that it will be held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

Operators Prepared.

Although the demand for coal for domestic consumption is at its height, a strike could find the country fairly well prepared. Because a threat to strike has been in the air for months, operators have been busy getting coal above ground. The Bureau of Mines reports that the present supply is 41,200,000 tons, enough to last about 53 days.

Soft coal in varying quantities is mined in nearly every section of the United States. Large producing States include Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Indiana, Kentucky and Illinois. Considerable coal also is produced in some of the Southern States, particularly Alabama, and in the West.

A strike would find the union numercally stronger than it has been at any other time of crisis. Establishment of the NRA gave a decided impetus to organization, and the union leaders made the most of the opportunity. There are, however, still some nonunion bituminous mines, particularly in the South.

The meeting yesterday was attended by a large group of miners and operators. It was called at the request of McGrady after a subcommittee of two miners and two operators reported that agreement was impossible.

Mellon Is Blamed.

John L. Lewis, president of the miners' union and considered by many the country's No. 1 labor leader, blamed failure to reach an agreement on Andrew W. Mellon, former Secretary of the Terasury, who owns vast mining interests, utilities interests on the Atlantic Coast and New York banks.

"These are modern dictators," Lewis said, "setting up their will against the mining interests and against the people of this country."

Lewis declared that the steel interests did not want the miners to receive more wages because might affect the wage rates in their mills. He said operators feared to increase wages because of opposition of large consumers of coal.

Speaking for the operators, Charles O'Neill, Pittsburgh mine owner, said the operators could not afford to pay increased wages because of the falling off in the consumption of coal, due partly to increased use of oil and gas as fuel. He predicted that a strike will cost the operators millions of tons in cnosumption, because consumers will turn to other kinds of fuel.

"A shutdown would do irreparable injury to both sides," he said. "We realize that the men are not making enough wages to support their families. But this industry cna not pay enough for three days' work to pay a man what he should get for a full wek's work."

Approximately 100 miners and 100 operators sat in the Shorehame ballroom listening to speakers for both sides. The grups were divided by an aisle. Each side loudly applauded its speakers while the opposing side was silent. The room filled with smoke as the voices of the speakers droned on hour after hour. The meeting started at 10 a. m.

Between You and Me

The Great Potato Mystery; What Does Roosevelt Think Of The Royal Vegetable?

By Raymond Clapper

OBVIOUSLY, until President Roosevelt himself clears up the mystery, Democratic stump speakers will be well advised to go easy in discussing the recent potato control act.

As loyal soldiers, these party orators stand ready to risk snapping their vocal chords either pointing with pride or viewing with alarm as ordered. But until Mr. Roosevelt lets them konw whether he was responsible for putting this potato act through or not, the safest thing for anyone who wants to be sure of remaining on the Administration's white list of approved campaign speakers is to do a high, wide and handsome straddle.

* * *

Somehow or other, there got into the new AAA amendments, a complete act, several pages long, which claps down Federal control over the sale and shipment of potatoes from growers raising more than five bushels, fixes quotas limiting each grower, and requires that all such potatoes be shipped in containers bearing Federal tags. AAA officials are skeptical as to whether it can be made to work. Secretary Wallfunds with which to administer the act. To him that was a most welcome disappointment.

* * *

But the mystery is how this measure got into the AAA amendments and slipped through Congress.

The Republican national committee, believing this outrageous infringement of the indivdual nitiative of the prolific potato, has done consderable detective work to hunt down the responsible master mind.

Its conclusion is that White House pressure forced the potato act through Congress.

The project was launched in Congress by Representative Lindsay C. Warren, of North Carolina, one of the most active lieutenants of the Administration in Congress. As AAA officials were cold toward the prospect of being required to suppress bootleg traffic in "hot" potatoes, Warren's bill made little headway. On June 28, so the Republican national committee says, Warren appealed to Mr. Roosevelt for help, and, so it was reported at the time, the President promised to put the heat on House and Senate committee chairmen in favor of early action. Still there was not much progress. But several weeks later Mr. Roosevelt spent a week-end with Warren and other Democratic leaders at the Jefferson Island Club down Chesapeake Bay. The next day the Senate Agriculture Committee which previously had voted down the potato bill reversed itself and on July 22 it slipped through the Senate without a roll-call vate as a rider on the AAA amendments. And a short time later it went through the House.

On the basis of its tracing of the bill through Congress the Republican national committee concluded:

&staintTrtistof k-pN9cal m m m

"The bill was proposed by the Democratic members of the House. It received the indorsement and the powerful backing of President Roosevelt. Due to presidential pressure, the bill was reported from the Senate and the House committees on agriculture, both of which were completely dominated by Democrats. Due to continued presidential pressure, the bill passed both Houses. Due to presidential approval, it became a law."

* * *

Simultaneously with this Republican recital, came the Democratic official alibi, prepared by Charles Michelson, director of publicity for the Democratic national committee. His statement, entitled "Dispelling the Fog" left considerable fog still undispelled.

Mr. Michelson would have the hurried reader thing that Mr. Roosevelt was opposed to the potato act.

"It just happens," says this astute official Administration publicist, "that the day the potato program was tacked on the AAA amendments, despot Roosevelt was not despoting. He was not dictating the legislation in Congress. Perhaps if he had been, the potato amendment might not have gone through."

Perhaps not. Then again, perhaps so. For Mr. Michelson, out of the depths of his profound intimacy with the White House, explains:

"I, of course, do not know what the White House attitude toward the royal vegetable is."

Having thus dispelled as much fog as was possible under the circumstances, Mr. Michelson throws back at the Republicans the reminder that their great constitutionalist, Senator Borah, voted in person for potato control, and that 11 other Republicans from potato States voted for it. He doesn't say, however, whether that should be taken as a recommendation for the act or as good grounds for suspicion of it.

Cant'e Mr. Roosevelt let us know what his attitude is toward the royal vegetable?

Dark Tobacco Injured By Late Summer Rains

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Lynchburg, Va., Sept. 22.—Reports coming to the tobacco trade here indicate the dark crop was damaged to some entent by continuous rains late in August and early in September. Estimates fix the sales on the market here at tround 7,000,000 pounds.

Charlotte and Appomattox counties housed the crop before the damaging rains. Prevailing opinion is that the crop throughout the dark districts will contain a great deal of high grade leaf, but there will be much indifferent tobacco which will result from late curings.

"For the time being I was stumped. I had wired Mr. Barrymore for delivery to him at Syracuse, but I know the message was intercepted. My message said:

"'Darling Mickey. Nobody can separate us. I'm miserably unhappy without you. I'm flying to Chicago to find yo uagain.' Incidentally, Mr. Barrymore didn't leave me in anger a week ago Thursday. He was taken from my apartment by his manager.

"I was put off the train at the statoin with a gang of reporters. I later learned his car was switched to the yeards where he left it. At the time, I was stumped and followed the taxi containing Mr. and Mrs. Hotchener believing he would join them. They led me a merry chase, but he didn't come near them.

"His baggage was on the Chief so I boarded that train for the West. At Emporia, Kans., I learned he wasn't on the train, but came to Kansas City on another line. I doubled back there and broadcast for him.

Ethiopia Sees Britain's Fleet As Peace Hope

Officials Hold Ships Alone Check Speedy Attack by Mussolini.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Addis Ababa, Sept. 22.—Ethiopian officials believe only Britain's fleet now is able to prevent war between Italy's military machine and Ethiopia's spears and trade guns.

Italy's rejection of the Committee of Five peace proposals was anticipated here. It is believed that only fear of conflict with Britain prevents Premier Benito Mussolini from ordering the attack forthwith.

Mussolini's hint that he might consider new proposals is viewed as nothing but a device to gain time while perfecting his military preparations and weighing the danger of British intervention.

Ethiopia would refuse to accept any plan agreeable to Mussolini in his present mood, officials added.

"Nobody expected anything but refusal," a government spokesman explained. "However, the fact remains that hope of a final settlement was kept alive as long as the Italian decision was not known.

"British determination and the British fleet, carrying other nations along with the weight of its prestige, still is capable of turning the trick—at least of stopping war promptly, even if it cannot be prevented."

Ethiopians do not believe the League will be able to obtain unanimity on sanctions. Hence they regard British pressure as a bright spot on an otherwise gloomy horizon.

Opposes Any Mandate.

The mild tone of Saturday's Italian cabinet communique rejecting the peace proposals was a source of some encouragement. Nevertheless the foreign office reiterated that Ethiopia never would bow to a mandate or protectorate—which appears to be the minimum Italy would consider in its present mood.

Emperor Haile Selassie is expected to complete study of the proposals shortly and reply to Geneva immediately, accepting.

Slight encouragement is felt by Ethiopians in the lateness of the rainy season. This gives the League additional time to seek a peaceful solution and Britain more time to impress its influence upon Italy. Although for about a week the rain has been comparatively light, the ground still is too muddy to permit army movements.

Oil Company's Head Missing From Boat

Providence, R. I., Sept. 22 (AP).—George R. Wolf, 47, president of the Wolf Coal & Oil Co. of Chicago and the Arlon Cosmetic Co. of New York, a resident of East Greenwich, R. I., was reported missing from the New England Steamship Co. boat, City of Lowell, when it docked here from New York this morning.

A note saying he was "ending it all after dark," was found in his cabin addressed to his wife, the former Mary C. Llewellyn, of Chicago, whom he married last April.

Mrs. Wolf said that "my husband had an enemy and I wouldn't be at all surprised if he had met with some sort of foul play." She declined to amplify her statement.

The youngster, 4-year-old Adeline Foltz, died September 3. Her father, Nicholas Foltz, told the physician the grandmother had remained inconsolable and had abstained from food for three days.

Il Duce's Terms To Prevent War Given to League

Land Grants and Control of Ethiopian Army Asked; Acceptance Doubted.

hold on Britain's "life line of empire" through the Red Sea.

The Italian cabinet action of Saturday is viewed by some diplomats as a clever move to put final responsibility for war or peace up to the League rather than Italy. If Italy goes to war on the League's refusal to meet her conditions in Ethiopia, her position is not so flagrant as if she marched on her own refusal to meet the League's offer.

Bombshell to League.

The three Italian demands were a bombshell to the few high League officials and delegates who heard of them. Optimists were encouraged by the fact Mussolini finally had answered the plea of the British and French to submit counter-proposals.

However, leading statesmen said privately that the Italian terms were "utterly unsatisfactory" and forecast that the League would reject them unequivocally in their presetn form.

It remains to be seen whether Mussolini will compromise still more. Even so slight a gesture as today's is a far cry from his uncompromising attitude of a short time ago—before Britain had thrown a bristling battle fleet across the Suez Canal. Then he declared it was inconceivable that Italy would bring home its East African army, without a shot being fired unless she were granted a "complete protectorate" over Ethiopia.

The reported Italian counter-proposals failed to halt talk of sanctions among delegates. It still was believed generatlly that, in event of war, economic measures will be imposed immediately. Military sanctions require a unanimous vote of the Council, with the parties involved abstaining, and will require more consideration.

Moves Expected.

It was reported reliably tonight that the British will propose economic and financial sanctions against Italy as soon as hte Italian troops march into Ethiopia. The British envisage a "gentlemen's agreement" among League members to cease dealing with Italy, possibly reinforced bya council recommendation.

The British feel that such a boycott should be developed gradually toward the point where Italy would be unable to buy foodstuffs and raw materials. Any definite agreement not to sell essential materials might encounter opposition from the United States and other non-League cotton growers. On the other hand, the cutting off of Italy's credit would prevent her from buying United States cotton.

Should Italy resist such economic strangulation by seizing cargo ships in the Mediterranean, she would court military sanctions, if not war with League members.

Many diplomats agree that in event of military sanctions, the Council merely would authorize Britain to use her fleet against Italy in the Mediterranean. France hardly could be expected to engage in military activit yagainst Italy, since it would require withdrawing troops from her eastern frontier and expose her to Germany.

Britain States Fleet Is Reply To Italy's Press

Rome called upon Signor Suvich, unedr secretary of state for foreign affairs, on September 20 in order to communicate in the name of his majesty's government the movements of the British fleet atnd the reinforcements with men and material of British garrisons in the Mediterranean, adding that they are not intended to imply any aggressive intention upon the part of his majesty's government.

"He explained such measures had been taken as natural consequence of the impression created by the violence of the campaign against the United Kingdom which has been conducted by the Italian press during the last few weeks.

"Signor Suvich made an analogous communication and stated he was authorized to declare to the ambassador that the Italian military preparations in the Mediterranean Basin were of a purely precautionary nature and had no aggressive aims."

A foreign office statement emphasized there has been no special protest from Rome regarding the British naval and military movements and that the British government acted upon its own initiative in ordering Sir Eric Drummond, the British ambassador to Italy, to deliver this message to the Italian government.

Sir Samuel Hoare, the British foreign secretary, was in London today much improved in health and it was expected all ministers who have been on vacation will be back by tomorrow.

Private advices were understood to have been received from Sir Eric regarding Italy's objections to The League of Nations peace plan. These, it was expected, would be used to guide the British cabinet in its reliberations.

Prime Minister Baldwin got in touch will all available ministers to arrange important conferences for tomorrow.

The Italo-Ethiopian quarrel, authoritative observers said, has brought Britain face to face with a new challenge to her ancient command of the seas.

London was placarded with newspaper posters informing Sunday crodws "there still is hope" and "Mussolini leaves door ajar."

Throughout the school year, however, half the pupils at Eastern High will begin their day's work at 8:30. Eastern, which operated on two shifts last year, is to continue the same practice this year. Congestion now has reached the point which makes it impossible for the two shifts to overlap. Thus the hours this yar are from 8:30 to 12:30 and 1 to 5, instead of the former schedule of 9 to 2:30 and 11 to 5.

At least 7,500 children are expected to experience their first school session, either in kindergarten or the first grade, today. Tomorrow the total enrollment of pupils in the District is expected to reach 87,000, with an additional 2,000 expected the following day.

Waitkus telegraphed the Dublin broadcasting station, thanking it for weather information every quarter hour from midnight Saturday until he landed.

The presence of a number of animals in surrounding fields, which forced the flier to land so slowly that his engine stalled, was blamed for the accident. The right wing and undercarriage of the plane were damaged badly.

Week's Business News Hits Optimistic Note

With retail sales and carloadings breaking four-year records, bank clearings topping three-month figures, and automobile factories gathering momentum for their new models with large purchases of steel and other materials, business sentiment during the week was distinctly optimistic.

Actual steel operations declined somewhat during the week, but unfilled orders are on the upgrade, and as soon as the new automobile models go into production an increase is expected. Prices have generally been hoisted for the fourth quarter without formal announcement.

Carloadings reported during the week passed 700,000 units for the first time in four years; 700,000 generally being conceded as the division point between profit and deficit for the railroads.

Stories About the Pictures You're Seeing.

"THE BROADWAY MELODY": The current flicker, "Broadway Melody of 1936," will be compared with and recall the original "Broadway Melody of 1928." This was the first "all talkie—all singing—all dancing" picture and created a sensation.

There are many items about "The Broadway Melody of 1928" that one recalls readily: Bessie Love, Anita Page and Charles King were the stars. The song hits were "Broadway Melody," "You Were Meant for Me" and "Wedding of the Painted Doll." The story was about a Broadway singer who believes he is in love with one member of a sister team, only to discover that it is the other sister that he really loves.

In order to really compare the flickers, I sat in a projection room and ran off "The Broadway Melody of 1928."

• • • •

The story of "The Broadway Melody of 1928" is credited to Edmund Goulding. He is now a high-salaried director at Metro. The flicker was directed by Harry Beaumont. He is still a director at Metro. Additional dialogue was contributed by Norman Huston and James Gleason. Gleason appears, for a flash, in the opening sequence, which takes places in a music publisher's office where Charles King is demonstrating a new song hit he just wrote, "Broadway Melody." The picture begins with a shot of Manhattan and the camera moves up to Broadway; it is a daytime shot of Times Square. The Broadway of today appears to have changed as much as the picture technique.

• • • •

THERE were, although you may not remember, subtitles used throughout this "Broadway Melody." They didn't believe they could make a big change of scene without telling it in writing. You'd be greatly surprised at the change in fashions since then. Bessie Love and Anita Page wore dresses which touched their knees. The flicker also discloses the gerat technical progress made in the talkies. You'd laugh at the make-up on Miss Love and Miss Page, two beauties. The gorgeous sets look cheap. There is a big technicolor number, "Wedding of the Painted Doll," which clearly demonstrates the advance which has been made in this field. There are many lines in the picture which would never get by the censors today; also several shots of Anita Page. In fact, a section of the story, where Miss Page is going to "accept a Park avenue apartment and all that goes with it" from the Broadway producer, would never be okayed.

• • • •

The big difference between "The Broadway Melody of 1928" and the one now on display is that the original featured singing. The current one exploits dancing. The movies have learned how to photograph and present dance routines. There are dance routines in the original "Broadway Melody" in which the feet are not seen.

There is a party sequence in "Broadway Melody of 1928" in which a character brings a portable radio. There is a gag about it. The radio was something new then. The current "Broadway Melody" concerns itself with a radio performer and begins at a broadcasting station.

• • • •

THE new "Broadway Melody" cost more than $1,000,000, Jack McGowan and Sid Silvers should be credited for "clicking the story," as they say in Hollywood lingo. There were enough scenarios written to start a library. McGowan and Silvers took a story by Moss Hart called "Pamella Thorndyke," and turned it into a suitable script, especially for Jack Benny, the big name and high salaried player first engaged for it. Silvers, who is an actor and wants to act, wrote a role in it for himself. Metro wanted Stu Erwin to play the role of Snooper; but Silvers had written it so that they finally had to allow him to play it. Virginia Bruce was originally cast for the Eleanor Powell role and Vilma Ebsen was also considered for it. The picture was in actual production 2½months, and Buddy Ebsen walked about the studio for more than five weeks before he did a dance step.

• • • •

Practically everyone is taking credit for discovering Eleanor Powell. "Any person who ever saw her dance is now an "Eleanor Powell discoverer." There are many who have claims for being her Columbus. However, it was at a story conference that Jack McGowan said: "We're doing another backstage story about a girl who makes good. She's a dancer. For a change, let us get a performer who can actually do something and make good." He mentioned Eleanor Powell.

"The Broadway Melody of 1928" was also about a girl who made good in a Broadway show. The girl was Anita Page and she was the hit of the show and the sensation of Broadway by posing in a tableau. Honest.

BOYS WILL BE MEN

. . . what SORT of men?

YOUNG CHAP . . . do you remember Plutarch? WELL . . . we'll tell you about him. Plutarch was a Greek philosopher. He lived over a thousand years ago. He never even dreamed of automobiles, radios, airplanes or any of the modern wonders you take for granted today. He never even dreamed of the things that were wonders in your grandfather's time . . . or in your grandfather's grandfather's. He sported a long gray beard and wore a shining white toga. And out of his mouth came words of infinite wisdom . . . wisdom as applicable to life today as it was centuries ago, when the old Greek philosopher first achieved the glory which has never dimmed.

THERE'S JUST one remark of Plutarch's we'd like to pass on to you now . . . his other writings you'll discover later in college anyway. When asked what boys should learn, Plutarch replied, "That which they shall use as men."

DO YOU REALIZE that that is just what you're doing? Carrying your Post route day in and day out . . . establishing contacts with all sorts of people and learning to talk with them on their own ground . . . selling your product to them . . . handling money, keeping your accounts straight . . . do you know that as a Post Carrier Salesman you are unwittingly, perhaps, following Plutarch's advice?

KEEP UP the good work . . . we appreciate it. It's doing us a lot of good, of course . . . but it's doing you a great deal more. It is teaching you things which will put you one step ahead of your fellows later on . . . . when you're struggling in earnest to make your place in the sun. For you are learning "that which you shall use as men."

Leaner Food of Depression Due To Affect Children Physically

They Already Are Shorter and Lighter, Health Survey Shows.

By the Associated Press.

Ithaca, N. Y., Sept. 21.—The children of these depression years are going to be physically different when they grow up, due to the changes in their food.

Three scientific investigations recently completed so indicate. One is a public health survey showing children of six to 10 already shorter and lighter in weight due to leaner purses of their fathers.

Two is a Cornell experiment in which rats, underfed, lived twice as long and in one instance nearly three times the normal life span—the equivalent of about 150 years for a human being.

There is a Columbia University feeding test on rats in which seemingly the opposite thing has happened, when an enriched diet caused the animals to live longer. It is explained, however, that the Columbia and Cornell experiments really do not disagree.

Diet Differences Noted.

Both experiments prove beyond doubt one thing important for the children of this generation—that the diet differences will cause them to grow up different physically from their fathers and mothers.

Both experiments also prove that the differences attainable under laboratory conditions are tremendous and that some of them are desirable for human guidance.

But they do not show yet precisely how any miracle-making diets can be selected for human consumption. They leave open the question to what extent the present-day children are going to compensate themselves for what appears to be serious childhood dietary damage.

The Cornell feeding tests have just been concluded after four years, during which they attracted comment all over the world. They were conducted by C. M. McCay, M. F. Crowell and L. A. Maynard.

Deficient in Calories.

The animals were given diets in all respects except one—a deficiency in calories. Their average life span under ordinary conditions was 500 days. One male lived 1,421 days.

The long-lived Cornell animals matured more slowly than normal rats. They did not grow so large. Even the diameter of their body hair was less than that of ordinary rats. Their hearts were larger, livers smaller, bones less dense.

In contrast with this, the Columbia University rats matured earlier, and yet lived longer than the average and seemed to be healthier. The Columbia experiment apparently was equivalent to the experience of man if he could, by choice of food, live a fuller, richer, more productive adulthood—right to the end of his life.

The Cornell experiment showed the possibility of something like great lengthening of life by slowing down each stage of development, from youth to old age.

Used Different System.

The Columbia scientists, Prof. H. C. Sherman and H. L. Campbell, used a different dietary system. They developed two diets. One was adequate, the other enriched. The adequate diet maintained rat families in thriving condition for 17 generations.

The enriched diet, they report, "induces a better nutritional response in that growth is more rapid and efficient, adult vitality is superior, not only the average length of life but also the adult life expectation is improved, and the length of the period between attainment of maturity and the onset of senility is extended in still greater ratio than is the life cycle itself.

"There is no necessary inconsistency between this finding and that of McCay, Crowell and Maynard when due consideration is given to the fact that their experimental food mixture was very much richer in protein, and probably in some other nutritional factors than ours. When their very rich diet was fed ad libitum it seemed to force the rate of growth at the expense of length of life, whereas, the moderate enrichment of our initial food mixture induced both a more rapid and regular growth and an increase in length of life.

"We are now seeking to establish as definitely as possible both the nature of the enrichments which constitute improvements in an adequate diet, and the extent to which nutritional well-being is thereby improved."

Eastern Rail Fare Fight at Final Barrier

Exceptions to Reduction Are Filed by All but the B. & O.

Eastern railroads last week were driven to the last ditch in their fight against a reduction in passenger fares, highest in the country, with the filing of exceptions to the Commerce Commissioner's report recommending the reduction.

In presenting their statistical and legal objections, the Eastern roads were not joined by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, which inclines to the theory that lower rates would be ultimately to the advantage of the carriers. The protestants have asked for oral argument before the commission.

The lines opposing a cut in fares and elimination of the Pullman fare surcharges have the cream of the passenger traffic of the country. For the first seven months this year passenger revenues of all class one steam railways were $202,401,574, including $5,265,278 sleeping and parlor car surcharges. The Eastern district alone, including the New England, Great Lakes and Central Eastern regions, had $118,190,435 of this total and the Pocahontas region $3,664,442.

See Higher Expenses.

The Eastern roads have contended that an increase in operating expenses would be necessary to handle increased traffic, as shown by the following table of percentage changes in train miles, car miles, passenger miles and passenger revenue from 1933 to 1934.

	Train Miles Per cent.	Car Miles.	Pass. Miles.	Pass Rev.
Group I.....	—0.01	+1.00	+ 8.62	+ 6.53
East. Dis. incl. Poc.	—0.43	+0.77	+ 9.69	+ 6.30
So. Reg.....	+1.32	+6.16	+27.27	+16.96
West. Reg..	+1.48	+5.64	+18.91	+ 2.75
U. S.....	+0.58	+3.47	+15.27	+ 6.38

The commission's examiner proposed a rate of 2 cents a mile in coaches and 3 cents a mile, without surcharge, in Pullmans, bringing Eastern rates into harmony with those in other districts. One of the most interesting points raised by the objectors is the effect of this cut from the basic rate of 3.6 cents a mile upon revenue now derived from special excursion, convention, children's and commutation traffic.

"The examiner's proposals," the exceptions state, "and the estimated reduced revenues which he uses in support thereof in recommending to the commission that it exert this great power have a most disturbing aspect in that there is an appearance of a seeming evasion of full responsibility for the drastic reductions in revenues which would inevitably ensue if a complete and harmonious rate structure were built around the 2 and 3 cent fares recommended by him.

"He condemns the surcharge of about 10 per cent as being of tremendous sales resistance, yet his estimates are based on the supposed ability of the Eastern carriers to maintain a 50 per cent difference in Pullman fares over coach fares. He knows that the Southern and Western lines have not been able to maintain any such difference, but have been forced to establish round-trip fares which carry a large part of the Pullman traffic at a 2 cent rate when the return trip is made in a short period and 2½ cents for a longer period. Again, he condemns the basic fares of the Eastern carriers as stifling traffic and yet overlooks the fact that much of their traffic has been handled at rates less than the basic fares which he proposes, and that there is no possibility of handling that low-rated traffic upon the basic fares which he recommends."

The carriers discuss the possible reduction in commutation fares should basic fares be cut so drastically. Commutation revenues of the Central, Pennsylvania and New Haven in 1934 were nearly $25,000,000.

Minimum loss of revenue was calculated at $9,193,115 for the New York Central system, $12,324,200 for the Pennsylvania, $1,715,700 for the Long Island and $4,223,378 for the New Haven, making no allowance for changes in volume of traffic, in operating expenses, or in rates other than those now higher than 2 cents in coaches and 3 cents in Pullmans.

Business Notes.

George J. Jakobi, for the past two and a half years sales promotion manager and assistant to the vice president of The Palais Royal Department Store, will go to New York to head his own organization of Advertising and Merchandising Counsellors, it was announced yesterday.

Before coming to Washington he was with Stern Brothers, New York, as sales promotion manager, and later with Hearn's as director of publicity. He is a director of the Advertising Club of Washington.

Hudson Sales Up 11½%.

Retail sales of Hudson and Terraplane cars for the week ended September 14 totaled 1,069, as compared with 1,013 in the preceding week. This was an increase of 11½ per cent over the corresponding week of 1934. The company announced that dealer stocks have been reduced to a point at which there is now an average of about two cars to a dealer.

Wholesale Market Firm.

New York, Sept. 22 (AP).—Dun & Bradstreet reports that the undertone in wholesale commodity markets was firm last week, with the average level of prices closing practically unchanged from a week ago. After rising early in the week to the highest point since last May, the Dun & Bradstreet Daily Commodity Index stood at 120.94 on September 16, or slightly higher than a week ago.

Lead Up $1 Per Ton.

New York, Sept. 22 (AP).—With the advance of $1 a ton announced by producing interests yesterday, lead has moved up with other non-ferrous metals. The rise follows similar movements this week in copper and zinc.

Nation's Sugar Use Up 3.2% Over 1934

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Sept. 22.—During the first eight months of 1935, 124,720 tons more sugar were consumed in the United States than in the corresponding period of last year, according to Lamborn & Co. This year, to the end of August, 3,999,531 long tons, raw sugar value, were distributed as contrasted with 3,874,811 tons in the same period of 1934. The increase is equivalent to 3.2 per cent.

Cane sugar distribution totaled 3,167,370 tons, as against 2,834,193 tons during the corresponding period last year, an increase of 333,177 tons, or 11.7 per cent. Beet sugar distribution amounted to 832,161 tons, a decrease of 208,457 tons, or 20 per cent, when compared with the same period for 1934.

Steel Rate Off To 52% as Auto Output Lessens

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Sept. 22.—The magazine Steel's weekly review attributed a 2-point drop in the Nation's steelworks operations last week to delay by automobile manufacturers in releasing orders incidental to model change-overs and to a slackening in tin plate production. Operations averaged 52 per cent.

The publication said the drop threw into bolder relief the sustaining power of miscellaneous requirements which appear to be gaining momentum.

Sales of manufacturing equipment are piling up new records for the post-1929 period, with $5,000,000 worth being sold at the National Machine Tool Show which just closed here.

Expectations of larger automobile tonnage lifted sheet output 10 points to 70 per cent. A decline to 50 per cent in tin plate operations comes as a breathing spell after near-capacity operations for some months, the magazine said. It anticipates a measure of recovery after stocks are reduced in the fall canning season.

A broader demand is developing for some of the heavier grades of finished steel, especially for industrial development while factors continue which indicate a general improvement over the remainder of the year.

Meanwhile, financial difficulties are standing in the way of a tremendous buying program by railroads.

The price of major nonferrous metals rose sharply during the week. A $10 a ton increase in copper prices was attributed to the European war situation, plus a reduction in world stocks. The copper gain has been $20 a ton since August 1, while zinc and lead have advanced $7 a ton.

Steelworks operations in the Pittsburgh area dropped 2 points to 46 per cent last week, while Youngstown dropped 3 points, to 54 per cent, and New England 5, to 68 per cent. Wheat Acreage 25% Below '34 In Argentina

Long Drought Has Prevented Plowing in Many Regions.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Buenos Aires, Sept. 22.—Argentina's wheat acreage is 25 per cent below that sown last year, according to the ministry of agriculture's first estimate, while the flaxseed acreage is 24½ per cent less. The report says that in many sections of the norther part of the cereal belt the wheat sowings are 40 per cent under those of 1934.

The decrease is due to the long drought, which made plowing impossible in many areas or caused heavy losses in numerous regions after the grain had been planted. Sowings of all grains, not including corn, aggregate 23 per cent less than the total last year.

The ministry estimates the wheat sowings at 14,085,000 acres, compared with 18,804,000 a year ago. The ten-year average is 19,919,000. The area sown to flaxseed is estimated at 6,198,000 acres, compared with 8,099,000 in 1934. The oats acreage is 19 per cent lower than last year's, rye 25 per cent, barley 4 per cent and bird seed 20 per cent.

The ministry's report says that part of the areas sown are already virtually lost, especially in the case of wheat and flaxseed in the entire Rios Province, while many other sowings are in a criticial condition.

Heavy rains are urgently needed throughout the cereal belt within the next fortnight.

New York State and Boston Issues Are Largest Flotations.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Sept. 22.—State and city financing in the coming week will amount to $46,992,000, it was disclosed today. There is a possibility that scheduled issues may be postponed on account of the European war scare.

Leading the flotations is the $30,000,000 relief issue of the State of New York, on which tenders are to be opened Tuesday. Investment bankers reported little inquiry yesterday for the existing prime issues of the State.

Boston will receive bids Wednesday for $7,000,000 short term obligations, with little reason for postponement of that sale, since banks can be expected to absorb the notes.

The Boston issue consists of $4,000,000 notes dated September 30 and due July 10, 1936, and $3,000,000 notes dated September 30 and due September 28, 1936. Interest is to be paid at maturity, and tenders must be based on a 366-day annual basis.

Also announced was a flotation of $1,265,000 Niagara Falls, N. Y., sewage disposal bonds, on which tenders are to be opened October 4. Bidders are to name a coupon rate not in excess of 4 per cent, on this issue, which will be dated September 1, 1935, and due serially from January 1, 1937, to 1957.

Cuyahoga County, Ohio, will receive bids October 11 on $3,250,000 3¾ per cent refunding bonds, dated October 1, 1935, and due serially from 1941 to 1950. On the same day Cleveland, Ohio, will open tenders on $275,000 6 per cent paving and sewer bonds, dated October 1, 1935, and due from 1937 to 1947.

Cambridge, Mass., set September 24 for the sale of $200,000 street bonds, due from 1936 to 1940, on which bidders are to name the coupon rate. Wallingford, Conn., will receive tenders October 15 on $200,000 refunding bonds, details of which are to be supplied within a few days.

War Scare Jars Confidence of Bond Traders

Selling Movement Greatest During Last Half of Week.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 22.—Repercussions from the war scare which started in European capitals and quickly spread across the Atlantic were felt in the bond market last week.

Investment sentiment, previously confident and tranquil, on the basis of steadily improving industrial conditions at home, was jarred a bit by the sudden appearance of active liquidation from sources which had become fearful of armed conflict.

The selling movement had considerable force during the last half of the week, during which the European anxieties reached their most acute stage. Earlier only the foreign section of the list had reflected uneasiness, but from Thursday onward the whole market felt the impact of selling, and prices of all domestic categories slid off rather sharply.

Until upset by foreign events the market's underlying tone had been steady with values showing no wide changes. U. S. Governments changed their course after ten days of slow but steady decline. They recovered moderately on Wednesday and Thursday, but sagged again on Friday.

Heavy selling converged on Italian government and municipal bonds, most of which were forced down to new low levels for the year. Obligations of other important European countries at first stood firm, but finally they sold off sharply. British and Dominion bonds, along with those of Germany, Belgium, Poland and Japan lost considerable ground on the week.

New industrial bond issues brought out for subscription met a good reception at the hands of dealers, and observers looked for a prompt distribution among individual investors. The largest offering was that of Southern California Edison, embracing $57,500,000 of mortgage and debenture bonds.

A substantial amount of municipal obligations also was marketed.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Inc., and Stroud & Co., Inc.

Wool Trading Active.

New York, Sept. 22 (AP).—Trading in the Boston wool market continued at an active level last week. Some observers estimated the volume close to the best seen this year. Current sales, it was said, are running at a rate more than double the new production.

Profit Taking, War Fears Hit Curb Shares

Decoy Selling Is Major Factor in Declines; Short Interest Mounts.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 22.—The curb market gave ground under heavy selling late last week. With minor exceptions, all groups retreated to lower levels. Offerings were largely attributed to profit taking together with disturbing war rumors.

Swift Internacional and Aluminum Co. of America were notable resistance spots. Shares of the latter company rose 6 points on Wednesday, although yielding about half on the following day.

Sharp setbacks occured on Thursday and Friday, with extreme declines of around 2 to 4 points appearing in Sherwin Williams, Parker Rust Proof and Great Atlantic & Pacific. Other substantial losers included Hiram Walker, Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, American Gas & Electric, American Cyanamid "B," New Mont Mining and International Petroleum.

Average transfers for each full session, which were around 300,000 shares, were about the same as the week previous.

Curb exchange officials announced that the short interest in all shares as of August 31, amounted 27,635 shares compared with 22,039 shares on July 31.

The School Patrols.

Washington's traffic problem will be complicated, beginning today, by the presence of more than 80,000 school children on the streets and sidewalks. Precautions for their safety are being taken, but the hazards are nevertheless great. Especially during the morning rush period when children are going to school while thousands of employes are driving to their offices, extraordinary care must be taken to avoid frequent tragedies.

Fortunately this problem is being given systematic treatment. In co-operation with school and police authorities, the American Automobile Association will maintain student patrols for every school in the District and for some nearby suburban schools. Approximately 4,500 pupils in 270 patrol units will be called into this service. Moreover, the AAA will distribute large numbers of "graded safety lessons" and safety posters, carrying its antiaccident campaign into the high schools as well as the primary grades.

No reasonable estimate can be made of the lives that may be saved by this carefully devised safety program. But the number must be substantial. Children are given an awareness of danger in crossing streets that many adults have never acquired. In turn they are certain to communicate some degree of their caution to adults and thus indirectly to counteract the carelessness that is responsible for so many highway fatalities.

With this much accomplished, the foremost objective should be to impress drivers with a more acute sense of their added responsibility. For that task education must be supplemented by rigorous enforcement of traffic regulations. The opening of school may well be regarded as a signal for further intensification of the Police Department's campaign against potential killers on the highways.

Casey At The Bat.

Some complete and probably Republican romantic has sent us the announcement of the appointment of Edward Leo Casey as National Youth Administration director for Massachusetts. "Shades of Mark Hopkins, Emerson, et al!" the anonymous contributor has penciled upon the release. We think he misses the significance, even while sharing his deep doubts about the whole NYA experiment.

Mr. Casey is probably quite as fitted to guide an American youth movement as Emerson would have been. In fact the vision that arises of Ralph Waldo Emerson attempting to administer the expenditure of Government funds to young huskies of the public school system brings forth a paraphrase of his own poetic comment: "Good-by, proud world, I'm through."

It is perhaps doubtful if Mr. Casey, although trained at Exeter and Harvard, ever was accustomed to walk silently through Cantabrigian streets, a green baize bag over his shoulder, a copy of "The American Scholar" under his arm. More likely a pair of cleated shoes over the shoulder, the Transcript's sports pages under his arm.

For Mr. Casey for some dozen years has been, in the best American tradition, a Leader of Youth. As football coach at Tufts and latter at Harvard he has been, as every luncheon club listener knows, a Maker of Men. With Casey, as we may say, at the bat, the Administration has someone who will make the youth of Massachusetts Hit the Line.

And that, if we may believe the Old Grad, is something. At least it's better than Emerson, who stole all his stuff from Elbert Hubbard, anyway.

A Lesson For The States.

Nebraska's Legislature has tripped over the same block on which Congress has been barking its shins. In a decision likely to be no less momentous in the history of that State than was the Schechter opinion in our national annals, the Nebraska relief and old-age pension plans have been completely upset. Delegation of extensive discretionary powers to the executive is declared to be as illegal in Lincoln as it is in Washington.

The Supreme Court of Nebraska did not, of course, pass upon the merits of the canceled State legislation. Nor does its decision mean that Nebraska will have to modify its constitution to participate in the national pension systems. Assuming that press reports of the decision are accurate, it simply means that the Legislature will have to do its own law-making instead of handing over blanket authority to the Governor and to Congress.

The social security act had not been passed at Washington when Nebraska legislators enacted a measure intended to put it into effect. The method chosen was to set up a committee with wide discretionary powers and give it $4,000,000 to spend. It is useful for State law-making bodies as well as Congress to learn that short-cuts of this sort are not merely politically undesirable but legally invalid.

Aside from the issues in this particular decision, too many States are inclined to accept the dictates of Federal officials and rely upon national funds for local purposes. Under the New Deal State sovereignty has thus been seriously impaired. Governors and legislators have carelessly sacrificed the healthy tradition of home rule in order to obtain temporary Federal grants. If the Nebraska decision serves to counteract that tendency, it will be a salutary influence. The social security systems made possible through Federal legislation cannot be developed on a sound basis unless they are properly integrated with the governmental agencies and legal structures of the States.

Stabilization More Remote.

Fears that Europe may become involved in war through the Italo-Ethiopian dispute have dealt a severe blow to hopes for an international stabilization agreement within the near future. Even without this new complication, the obstacles to such an accord were numerous and serious. For months the surviving "gold bloc" countries, France, Holland and Switzerland, have been engaged in a desperate struggle to maintain the official parities of their respective currencies. The battle is not yet won, as none of these countries feels confident of its ability to survive many more internal "crises of confidence" accompanied by runs upon central bank gold reserves.

Devaluation of the franc and the guilder therefore, remains a live issue, which will in any case arouse heated discussion with the reassembling this fall of the French and Dutch Parliaments. Defenders of the gold standard have scored a provisional victory in both countries by securing support for budget-balancing, deflationary policies designed to lower domestic prices and costs and to relieve the pressure on the exchanges. But political opposition to this program has not been overcome, and resistance is certain to be greatly strengthened by current developments.

Confidence in the dollar is growing, as fears for the gold currencies increase. Foreign securities are being sold, and foreign balances are being exchanged for dollars, while hoarded gold, held chiefly in London, is being shipped to the United States. Thus an anomalous situation arises, with many people preferring an irredeemable currency (which could be further devalued by presidential proclamation) to possession of claims to gold or actual gold stocks.

The explanation is, of course, simple. Financial interests fear that a war involving Europe would result in general abandonment of the gold standard and possible nationalization of gold stocks, even by Great Britain. Dollar exchange has also been strengthened, however, by a movement of funds toward Wall street and normal seasonal factors.

The present inflow of gold resulting from this combination of causes, has added over $150,000,000 to our stocks within the period of two weeks. In 1934 the United States received over $1,000,000,000 of gold and this year the total already shipped or en route is not far from $1,000,000,000. Part of the receipts represent repatriated American funds and new gold, while a considerable amount is hoarded metal. Nevertheless, the continued movement is making heavy drafts upon European banking reserves and steadily increasing the pressure upon the gold standard currencies.

Only a few days ago the French minister of commerce said that if other countries would agree to maintain their currencies at a given parity, France would consent to liberalize her tariff and quota policies. He properly added that no solution of depression could be expected until monetary instability and exchange controls have been removed. However, the war clouds gathering over Europe have made discussion of the subject futile for the time being.

Currency instability is one of the incidental costs of international disturbances, whether they be political or economic, but it is a very heavy one. That is evident from the contrast between the recovery that has taken place in the domestic business of many countries and the very slow improvement in exporting industries and foreign trade.

Government Housing Projects.

The President's decision to cut the amount of work-relief funds available for low-cost housing and slum clearance to $100,000,000 has been generally interpreted to mean that the housing program will be seriously hampered by lack of money.

However, as Felix Bruner pointed out in an article on the page opposite Thursday, less than $20,000,000 has been spent so far by the Government for urban housing, either directly or through loans to limited dividend corporations. After abandoning the financing of the latter, the PWA undertook to build and rent low-cost apartments with Federal funds. So far only one structure has been completed, four other projects are in process of construction, and bids are to be opened shortly for three more.

This pitiful record of accomplishment after more than two years of activity confirms a conviction that the business of building and renting apartments is an alien and unsuitable field of activity for the Federal Government. Federal funds, may, under proper safeguards, advantageously be advanced to assist municipalities in the financing of local slum-clearance projects and in the construction of model tenements to take the place of insanitary dwellings. Even under such limitations, more harm than good may be done by hasty erection of apartment houses that fail to meet the needs of dispossessed tenants, or that discourage the revival of non-subsidized building activities of a private character.

A Federal housing program should not be hastily developed as a means of providing employment for building-trades workers. It must be planned carefully in close co-operation with local authorities in order to produce satisfactory results. Moreover, the numerous legal obstacles encountered in trying to acquire suitable sites is an ever-present deterrent to speedy completion of an ambitious housing program. The limited results achieved to date are not a reflection upon the energy or the initiative of the housing division of PWA, but only further evidence that a successful housing plan must be gradually evolved from modest beginnings.

Good Advice.

The defects of the new tax law were discussed so exhaustively when it was before Congress that nothing now remains to be said on the subject. Nevertheless, the committee on Federal finance of the United States Chamber of Commerce has performed a valuable public service in reminding the country that we have no adequate revenue program and no plan for balancing the budget. The last-named objective calls for a combination of reductions in public expenditures and new taxes that will raise funds without retarding recovery.

The so-called revenue act is upon the statute books and Congress has adjourned; so criticism cannot bring about immediate reform of the tax system. There is still a possibility, however, of calling a halt to spending. A large part of the $10,000,000,000 voted by Congress for the current fiscal year may be spent at the discretion of the President. The finance committee's report suggests, therefore, that a "prudent policy of spending could result in large savings and the expected deficit would be correspondingly reduced."

This is good advice which, it would seem, could be more easily followed than disregarded, considering the difficulty that the Government has encountered in the $4,000,000,000 work relief program. Unless the Federal authorities throw money away or spend it recklessly on useless projects, it is reasonably certain that they will not be able to disburse the enormous sums placed at their disposal before next July.

If huge outlays could be relied upon to solve the problem of unemployment, the anxiety created by failure to balance the budget would not be so great. But as former Director of the Budget Lewis W. Douglas says in an article in the October Atlantic:

> The record shows clearly that Government spending as an instrumentality of recovery is almost wholly ineffective. . . . But billions have been spent, and not even one unemployed person out of ten has been given a temporary job. And the few jobs which are created are more than offset by the destruction of general confidence in private business as a result of the growing Government deficits.

For Human Needs.

As the 1935 Mobilization for Human Needs Conference opens at the White House today, it is timely to contemplate the great changes effected in recent years in the methods of relieving distress. Those changes are suggested by some of the subjects to be discussed. For example, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will speak on "Meeting Human Needs Unmet by Government;" Edward D. Duffield, will reply to the query: "Do Taxes Meet My Duties as a Good Neighbor," and Walter Lippmann will outline the significance of the social security program to private welfare agencies.

To a large extent the Government has taken over responsibility for relief of physical human wants resulting chiefly from unemployment. Public agencies have greatly reduced the demand upon private institutions depending upon individual contributions for their income. Even though the care of unemployables is being shifted back to the States and Transient Bureaus are being closed, the functions of private charity will be further limited by the social security system. So far as providing actual means of sustenance is concerned, public authority has probably encroached permanently upon private charity.

Does this mean, then, a steady diminution of the need for mobilizing public sentiment in behalf of the underprivileged? On the contrary it emphasizes the magnitude of the task confronting agencies engaged in this work. Federal relief at best is a stopgap arrangement. Even the social security program will supply merely the bare necessities of life. Such tremendous objectives as character building, mental rehabilitation and miscellaneous welfare work will be left—where they properly belong—in the hands of private institutions financed by public-spirited citizens.

In some respects this work is even more important than emergency relief, for it strikes at fundamental defects of our society. If properly conducted, it should curtail crime and unsocial conduct as well as poverty. Instead of duplicating governmental outlays for temporary relief, therefore, united community enterprises of this character may ultimately be a significant influence in the abolition of doles.

It is generally the case that the man who pats you on the back uses only one hand. That's because he usually has a knife in the other hand.

It isn't fair to hold a man accountable for anything he says under the influence of whisky, women, fear or eloquence.

The Prettyman Opinion.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman has again shown his judicial acumen and level-headedness in dealing with the teaching of modern economic theories in the classroom in his recent ruling submitted to the Board of Education. He deserves credit.

It is much better to let students get a clear and impartial explanation of ideas that are affecting the lives of millions in the judicial atmosphere of the classroom than to have our boys and girls picking up their economic ideas from the gutter.

The "big bad wolf" of communism will have his hide tanned to a "fair-you-well" in na open classroom discussion. That is a lot different to propaganda.

Verisimilitude Overdone.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your heading of my letter "Your Logic Would End Democracy," was misconceived. You may construe the article as purely satirical, or even as silly; anything but serious. It was a parody in which verisimilitude was overdone. Not even Jim Farley's forecasts are more certain than that the Republican Party as such, or revamped, will bob up like Hamlet's ghost as usual to plague us in November, 1936. That it will not, is not seriously predictable.

Nor does The Post believe more profoundly in a "Two-Party System" than does the writer. It is the one safeguard against dictatorships whose sole sizable remaining opponents are America and England. Dictatorships are world menaces, which like the lamented Huey Long, leave no heirs to carry on save those misbegotten twins, anarchy and dissolution. By all means here's looking toward being confronted by that time-honored adversary, the Republican Party, in 1936. May we have the rich, as we have the poor, always with us. We need the one, and the other needs us.

As to your interesting reference in the same issue (September 12) to "Sunny Jim's" continuance as national chairman, perhaps he feels obligated to stick and make good his own forecasts. It would be like him. GEORGE E. GARY.

Dress For School.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We have just read Miss Dell's "Declaration of Independence" for high school girls in The Post of September 19 and disagree as to her statement that girls come to school in long, snaky evening dresses. By the way, we'd like to know where it is possible to achieve an evening dress for $4.

As for wearing middy blouses and serge skirts, we're sure they would look more charming on a child in her primary years. We feel that oxfords are entirely suitable for school wear, but if one chooses to wear high heels, after all, one risks one's own neck and not that of others.

Accepts The Challenge.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I recently received through the columns of your paper a challenge to a public debate on the subject of the value of vaccination as a preventive for smallpox.

I will be more than glad to accept this challenge if Mr. Bradford or some of his supporters will be kind enough to supply me with information as to where it would be held and a few other details concerning it.

There are certain personal considerations which might make a debate of this nature impossible under some conditions and I would like, therefore, a bit more information before making the acceptance final. As I am a comparative stranger here I hardly think Mr. Bradford or his supporters will feel the above request unjust.

If this suggestion meets with the approval of Mr. Bradford and his supporters the next move is theirs. Otherwise there is nothing more to be done. G. M. W.

Serious In Both Cases.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mrs. Bascom's letter of September 19, concerning a supposed increase of drunken drivers fails to make her point that legal liquor creates a more dangerous traffic situation than bootleg liquor did under prohibition. While her statistics are probably taken from authentic reports, they are so incomplete as to be valueless for any reasonable comparison between prohibition days and the present.

Presumably she is comparing statistics for the two years when national prohibition was unquestionably a thing of the past. It would be interesting if she would go back to the period 1928-31 (while prohibition was in full swing) and study the statistics on drunken driving. I am sure she would be compelled to change her conclusions. Official police statistics from 43 cities, representing two-thirds of the population of New York State, show an average of 2,273 arrests of drunken drivers annually during the typical prohibition period, as compared with 1,553 such arrests in 1934.

Official police statistics from 323 cities, scattered throughout the country, with an aggregate population of 36,000,000 show a situation very different from what Mrs. Bascom would have use believe. During the typical prohibition period (1928-31 inclusive) the average number of arrests of drunken drivers per year was 24,306; the average number of arrests in "beer and repeal years" was 20,927.

While drunken driving is a serious menace and every effort ought to be made, without fear or favor, to stamp it out, obviously national prohibition is not the solution to the problem. We must find something more effective.

Double-Lane Roads.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There is only one remedy for the elimination of highway murders and it amazes me continually that more stress is not laid upon it. That remedy is—to make the roads foolproof, or as nearly foolproof as it is possible to make them. Railroads formerly killed people by the hundreds until double-tracking and the installation of foolproof devices practically put an end to the slaughter. Until roads are built double, that is, one-way systems, until all curves are made wide and banked well for high speeds, and until no roads are permitted to cross the highways except at circles which will make all traffic pause, crashes will continue. The sooner the public realizes the sad truth of our pitiful highways as the major cause of highway accidents the sooner will our people be relieved of the sight of gore along the ribbons of our beautiful countryside.

Perhaps it will be left to our great-grandchildren to look back with horror upon a generation that permitted such a situation to endure—to look back with utter amazement upon the spectacle of two high-powered motor cars, each doing 60 to 80 miles per hour, passing each other in opposite directions on the same strip of road.

Three and four lane highways do not suffice. Everyone now recognizes their ineffectiveness. Double highways with a strip of land between and traffic only one way is the only practical way to cure this monstrous evil. A. B. LITTLE.

Washington, Sept. 18.

In Condemnation Of Defense Highway.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have just read Strickland Gillilan's letter in defense of Defense highway in The Post of September 20. While usually enjoying and agreeing with Mr. Gillilan's "Quizzical Observations," I feel compelled to take a stand against his condemnation of drivers who complain of this highway.

I think Mr. Gillilan would find, if he made diligent inquiries, that it is not the "noodleheads" and the "nitwits" who complain, as the condition of a road would make no difference to them. It is the safe and sane, conservative driver who so justly demands that something be done about this road.

Has Mr. Gillilan ever driven this road at night, when dampness made little puddles of fog in every hollow? Even the most careful driver finds it difficult to distinguish an unexpected and sharp curve in a fog.

Every driver knows that even the slight depression made by street car tracks can twist the wheels of a car driven at moderate speed. I do not believe Mr. McCarthy was a "noodlehead" nor was he going at the rate of 65 miles an hour when his tragedy occurred.

Perhaps familiarity with Defense highway has bred a certain contempt for it in the breast of Mr. Gillilan, but before making such profuse ridicule of the complainants, he should place himself in the position of a stranger forced to travel this road on a dark, damp night.

LEONTINE GALLAHORN.

Silver Spring, Md., Sept. 20.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The case against Defense highway is not that it has murderous intent, as suggested by your correspondent in The Post of September 20, but that it does offer the humble motorist (whether superhuman or just merely human) more provocative temptations to enter its innocent-appearing death traps than any similar stretch hereabouts.

Theory or no, the simple facts are that that road has a sickening record of deaths.

Can We Keep Out Of It?

Post Office, Monday.

EVERY proponent of peace should read the new book on war. There have been a lot of books on war lately—most of them too hysterical, too technical or too long. The new one is so calm that it makes you shudder, so simple that a child could "get it," and so short that you'd hardly call it a book at all: only 38 pages.

We wish we knew its author's name.

* * *

For he's anonymous. He is just the author of this, the first in a series called Headline Books, published by the Foreign Policy Association, edited by Ryllis Alexander Goslin. They are "to present the complicated international problems of our time in a form understood by people who do not normally read 'serious' books." And if they are all going to be like this one, they are all going to deserve success.

* * *

It is called "War Tomorrow: Will We Keep Out?" That "We" is you and us and the United States.

* * *

We Americans loathe war. For long after the World War began, we thought ourselves comfortably isolated. What if invention had abolished distance? We were determined to let Europe fry in its own grease.

However, if invention had abolished distance, the business interrelationship of all the world had opened our doors—and it kept them open. This author shows how war came in—how, with an ingenuous belief that he would pay well for his board, we invited him.

* * *

We announced our neutrality. But if we could thus assure ourselves peace, couldn't we also assure ourselves prosperity? By July, 1916, our shipments of explosives had jumped from $10,000,000 worth to $715,000,000—and the terms were largely cash.

Nor were such obvious munitions the end of it. Armies were becoming mechanized, and the day was done when they "lived off the land." Our mills sent food, clothes, machinery abroad. By 1915 our exports were multiplying 1914's $1,500,000,000 by three. Next year they were close to $4,000,000,000. Prosperity? "Every man a king!"

And contraband? Well, anyhow, how could anybody call food, for instance, contraband?

* * *

But some people did. After a bit, 90 per cent of all our exports to Europe "had been listed as contraband by one warring nation or another." The Allies began to seize our ships bound for Germany. Germany began sinking our cargo ships bound for the Allies' countries.

* * *

Another thing: The foreign purchasers cash gave out. Although our Government had declared that loans to the fighters would be "inconsistent with the true spirit of neutrality," we had all become prosperity-adicts. So certain banks arranged—oh, not loans (yet), but credits. Not until about 14 months after the governmental warning against loans was "the first great war loan made (in America) to France and England."

* * *

But then?

Big investors were in. The little investors were coming in. Our farmers are still sufffering from the leap they made. Industry had, as we've seen, been in from the start—and all the workers in industry.

In? None of us could get out. Ambassador Page expressed, from London, the opinion that "perhaps our going to war is the only way in which our present pre-eminent trade position can be maintained and a panic averted." The majority of Americans were with him. Better war than panic! So we went to war.

* * *

We went to war. More than 350,000 Americans were killed or wounded. Our part in the World War has thus far cost us over $55,000,000,000. And this figure keeps mounting every day.

* * *

That's one light which the author of "War Tomorrow" casts on our recent past, our panic present, our problematic future.

* * *

Today another cataclysm threatens: a war in which the civilian populations of every participating country must help and suffer, face death by quick fire or slow starvation—women and children, too. Today, as before, we've declared our neutrality. Today, moreover, we have banned the export of munitions, and all that. But what are munitions? Rather: What aren't? And what, therefore, is neutrality?

* * *

Have we really learned our lesson? That is this author's question. Will we keep out? Can we?

* * *

The Post-Impressionist doesn't accept all of the book's economic inferences, but its neutrality program is convincing. If we are to keep out, we must prohibit export of munitions of any description to any belligerent, forbid belligerents all credits and loans. We must abstain from every effort to make money out of blood.

"It is not enough to say 'We don't want war'—we said that in 1914."

Fair Enough

Warbling Of A Duck.

HERBERT HOOVER'S low rumbling appeal for the United States Constitution had a very incongruous sound, as though a rooster had mooed or a duck had warbled. He is about the last man from whom I would expect to hear a defense of the Constitution unless he were meaning to be funny. And Mr. Hoover never has been accused of owning a sense of humor.

Looking back over Mr. Hoover's Administration as President and the Administrations of his two immediate predecessors, I distinctly recall that the Constitution and the authority of the United States were first brought into popular contempt by them. This is not to contend that Mr. Roosevelt's program is constitutional. As Mr. Hoover suggests, the New Deal does look slightly unconstitutional around the edges. But who is Mr. Hoover to complain of that? On the contrary, it seems to me that Mr. Hoover and the Messrs. Coolidge and Harding before him prepared the public to accept unconstitutional government and that Mr. Roosevelt, a rather careless man and given to lazy generalities, is merely taking advantage of their missionary work. It might be possible for him to put his program into effect within the Constitution, but that would be the hard way.

• • • •

THOSE of us who are old enough to remember the period before the prohibition amendment will recall that the Constitution was seldom mentioned in those days. It was there, like the air, for out benefit, but was just taken for granted. Similarly, the authority of the United States Government was a majestic thing. Children grew up believing that anyone who willfully opened a letter addressed to another person or made chalk on a green letterbox was violating the Federal laws and would surely be tracked down and sent to prison.

Correspondingly, the adults respected the Federal laws and feared Federal prosecution much more than State laws and State prosecution. You could always see somebody about a State prosecution, but the Federal Government was powerful and just and not to be fooled with.

But with the arrival of prohibition the Constitution and the authority of the Government began to suffer in the opinion of the people. Under prohibition an amendment to the Constitution was made the excuse for the most brutal violations of the constitutional rights of the ordinary people. It turned out for the first time in American history that a man could be prosecuted twice for one offense against the prohibition amendment. It also turned out that his home could be raided—not his speakeasy, mind you—but his very home where he lived with his wife and children, on the mere suspicion that he there possessed as little as a dram of liquor containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume. At the slightest show of resentment the agents of the Constitution might slug him over the head, and if the agents got excited they might kick his wife in the stomach before the eyes of the children. That was the sort of thing which the Constitution came to represent to the people durng Mr. Hoover's many years in Washington as Cabinet member and President. And never, to this very day, has he been heard to utter so much as a syllable in disapproval.

• • • •

AS a result of this the people developed a very cheap opinion of the Constitution. Even Army officers, who are required to renew their vow to the Constitution every year, would do so with a lie in their hearts and go on drinking contrary to their word of honor, which is a serious matter to an Army officer.

People who had never consciously violated the Constitution in any other way now violated it thousands of times over the prohibition years and took pride and delight in their defiance of the authority of the United States Government. They even sympathized with professional criminals organized into gangs to mock the Constitution. They loathed the brawling, grafting political vermin who were sent out by Mr. Hoover and his two predecessors to make a pretense of enforcing the law.

• • • •

IT was not a partisan amendment. Prohibition originated in the Democratic South and drew from the Southern clergy some of its most bloodthirsty advocates. Southern Democratic statesmen were savage about it, too, but no more brutal than certain Northern Republicans who were constantly offering new implements of torture with which to make the law more painful the the Constitution more contemptible. And throughout the life of the Eighteenth Amendment its enforcement was in the hands of Republican Presidents, including the one who, within the past week, deplored the tendency to take liberties with the Constitution.

Mr. Hoover is right in one respect—the Constitution certainly has lost dignity. Huey Long demonstrated that the people no longer regard it as a sacred thing. But there is no man on earth or under it who has more individual responsibility for that than Herbert Hoover.

The Odyssey

By William Lyon Phelps

IT IS high time that someone in America should speak out his mind about the late Col. Lawrence's translation of Homer's "Odyssey." Col. Lawrence, also known as Shaw, was such a splendid character, lived such an extraordinary and never-to-be-forgotten life, did original writing that produced and will continue to produce an immensely powerful effect on many readers, that there is danger the tremendous prestige of his name will give a fictitious value to his translation.

As a matter of fact, it is inferior to three prose translations—that by Butcher and Lang, by A. T. Murray (Loch Library), by George Herbert Palmer.

As one that for a weary space has lain
Lulled by the song of Circe and her wine
In gardens near the pale of Proserpine,
Where that Aeaean isle forgets the main,
And only the low lutes of love complain,
And only shadows of wan lovers pine—
As such an one were glad to know the brine
Salt on his lips, and the large air again,—
So gladly, from the songs of modern speech
Men turn, and see the stars, and feel the free
Shrill wind beyond the close of heavy flowers,
And through the music of the languid hours
They hear like Ocean on the western beach
The surge and thunder of the Odyssey.

The trouble with Lawrence's translation is that it gives little suggestion of these emotions. Discussion continued tomorrow.

Meet 'Alf' Landon

The Governor Of Kansas Is Neither A Lochinvar Nor A Shrinking Violet; A New Type of Presidential Timber, Says Observer.

By Hilding Siberson.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Topeka, Kans., Sept. 22.

THE thing that impresses a good many people about Gov. "Alf" Landon of Kansas in connection with his availability as a Republican presidential candidate is that he seems to dramatize the quality of being undramatic.

The usual formula for a favorite son, a new star in the firmament, a dark horse, and the other varieties of excited presidential potentials is to say that the prospect is a fiery young war horse, or a powerful speaker, or a brilliant campaigner or some other form of an attention-getter.

If, on the other hand, he blushingly and conspicuously protests his lack of design on a presidential nomination, he appears to be overcoy, a foxy angler for the honor.

Gov. Landon doesn't seem to run true to form. He refuses to pose, either as a Young Lochinvar or as a timid, bashful violet. He won't even pose in his capacity as a quiet business man. All he does is to saw wood, split kindling, and chop logs, as it were, letting the chips fall where they may. He makes very few speeches and betrays a great aversion to leaving the State, though he has received numerous urgent invitations.

• • • •

ABOUT the nearest he has come to throwing his hat into the ring is to issue a stirring Constitution Day proclamation containing implications that American citizens may well look to the preservation of that document. If that be treason, make the most of it.

To a friend he recently wrote that the country faces its greatest crisis since 1860, and that the issues involved in the coming conflict are far more fundamental than those of 1896. He further said that this is a time when every one has to take an interest in politics.

But even when former Vice President Curtis recently gave an interview strongly boosting him for the Presidency, and Senator Capper, Representative Hope and other members of the official Kansas crowd cordially chimed in with approval, "Alf" Landon remained silent. He seems to have mastered that art—a very difficult one in politics—of remaining quiet in seven languages, and of keeping his powder dry.

No one has yet succeeded in getting him to say that he is a candidate for the Presidency. He has not taken a single step in the direction of securing delegates or in other ways preparing for the 1936 Republican convention. Columns and columns have been written about him, not only in the publications of the Middle West but in the Eastern press. He has been highly praised. William Randolph Hearst tossed him a goodly bouquet. His name is prominently mentioned on the Pacific Coast. And still he goes on sawing wood and saying nothing. It is really quite puzzling.

And the reason: Simply that it isn't yet time for him to speak, since he is a comparative newcomer among the eligibles. Common sense indicates that it would not be seemly for him to start out rounding up delegates. That isn't quite in the picture, and "Alf" Landon is highly intelligent.

• • • •

IT must be exceedingly comforting to him, however, to know that he has the solid support of the Kansas Republicans, who have been split up more or less ever since the "Boss Buster" days of 1904, when two distinct factions started fighting one another. He was for a time private secretary to former Gov. Henry J. Allen, who is one of his warm supporters and friends. William Allen White praises him. The Progressives and Old Guard support him. Even some of the leaders of the Kansas Young Democratic Club members jumped the traces and came out for him a few weeks ago, to add to the general big doings of good will.

The reason for his popularity? Mainly that he has kept the Kansas budget balanced, reduced taxes and run the State business efficiently, in an era when the Federal Administration has done the opposite things. This way of administering public affairs, which seems so strange in the national picture, caused him to be elected and re-elected in the midst of the greatest Democratic landslide in history.

Personally, he is a quiet, business-like man, less than 50 years old, with a wife and three children, a liking for fishing and a tendency to treat public business just as he would his own—honestly and with a view to economy and delivering a dollars' worth of work for a dollar's pay.

In a day when Federal business has been conducted with a maximum of ballyhoo, prodigious inefficiency and tremendous increase in present and potential taxation, there seems to be a sub-conscious yearning in the heart of the average citizen for a President who will dramatize the opposite quality and be undramatic. This average citizen seems to have a longing for a rest from high-power brain-trustiong, and a relaxation into the ways of simple, methodical, businesslike administration of public office.

It was probably this same kind of yearning which swept Harding into office after the terrific strain and emotional phenomena of the World War, since Harding promised nothing in particular but "normalcy." There seems to be no comparison between Harding and Landon, since the former was a skilled politician and the latter is a plain business man. But the yearning of the electorate may prove to be the same in both cases.

THE general consensus seems to be that the Republican Party must nominate a Westerner or Middle Westernerer next year. Anyone from the Eastern States who complies with standard weights and measures for presidential aspirants would start under the handicap of being punatively aligned with "Big Business." Further than that, it is generally recognized that the agricultural problem will provide the most sensitive area in the nervous systems of both parties. It is therefore most logical to nominate a man who has had his hands in the soil and knows how it feels—who knows what farmers are thinking and what they desire.

Since Landon has been twice elected Governor in the predominantly agricultural State of Kansas, with all the other Republican States going Democratic the problem seems to grow simpler when Landon's name is mentioned. Borah has a strong following in Iowa and other Middle Western States, but when he is analyzed as to his ability to work in team-harness and abandon his lifelong role as a snorting lone mustang of the buttes and prairies, his availability may diminish. In a recent poll conducted by a Middle Western newspaper, not in Kansas, Borah ran first among Republicans. Vandenburg and Knox ranked high. London came next. In a few weeks the availability of the various candidates will be sifted, and things should begin to happen.

In the meantime "Alf" Landon just saws wood. As the Kansas City Star says, he is a good, substantial man with a love for fishing, and with an infectious smile and a great ability to run a State successfully and economically. "That's Alf Landon, who possesses a sense of humor, who thinks carefully and seriously, but who never has taken himself too seriously."

And his refusal to take himself too seriously is probably what has caused him unconsciously to dramatize the quality of being undramatic.

Cumberland, Md., Sept. 22.—With two weeks of school completed, enrollment figures for the public and parochial schools of Allegany County show an attendance of nearly 19,000, with approximately half the students in Cumberland schools. The public school enrollment is 16,045, of whom 7,326 are registered in Cumberland. In the parochial schools are 2,513 children, of whom 1,608 are in Cumberland.

Bruce High, Westernport, shows the largest gain over last year, but Allegany and Penn Avenue, this city, have the largest totals.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall

Our First Days In The White House.

YOU'D think, from the sort of reading matter which confronts us at every turn, that each and every one of us were grooming himself for the Presidency. Once the proper salutation, when you took your walks azroad, was to ask your friend how their second acts were coming. Now you simply aren't in the swim unless you inquire: "How are you doing with your presidential platform?"

Just point me out any home-bound burgher, Connecticut avenue at 5 p. m., and I'll lay dollars to doughnuts that he is cogitating his position, not in matters of bulbs for the garden or new piston rings for the car, but on national neutrality and world warfare. What could I do about the foreign credits of the big bankers, he asks himself, staring hard at a taxicab. Do the economic factors of war really outweigh the pschylogical, he ponders while waiting for the green light. Solemnly, judicially, he reviews Italy's lack of oil and cotton and Japan's hunger for iron and what these points mean in the long run, and despite the fact that he has already forgot to bring home the two pounds of porterhouse which his wife wanted, our honest burgher decides that only the well-planned world state will solve things.

How in thunder, though, he then demands of himself, could I bring that about if I were President?

• • • •

A LITTLE booklet such as "War Tomorrow: Will We Keep Out?" (Foreign Policy Association, 35 cents) is one to put us all in a fret of presidential anxiety. Here, in the first of the "Headline Books" series, we are given in simple fact and simple chart a summary of those factors which lead a country to war. You must know them in outline—nationalistic pride; the necessity of foreign markets to keep the internal economy blooming; the more biting need to import goods not found at home; the time-honored theory that national wealth must be based on continuel expansion.

All these are familiar enough, and "War Tomorrow" merely drives the points home with the terrible simplicity of looking a fact in the face. When Editor R. A. Goslin presents the basic story of our entering the World War, he shows us as plain as black and white that the very same steps, seemingly so guileless and inevitable, will drag us to another plunger. If we assume the theory that preparedness is a safeguard, we ought at least recognize that the European nalons thought the same thing in 1914—and I believe you'll grant that the theory turned out to be no great shakes. If we think we can merely sit tight on our 3,000-mile continent and let the bully boys go ot it, then we must know that we can't take one cent of profit out of that fracas—or we'll be in up to the neck.

WRITING your presidential platform, you mustn't flinch at word "agrobiology." It merely means agriculture with a college education. But according to its high priest, Dr. O. W. Willcox, agrobiology is prepared to lead to world peace. In his book, "Nations Can Live at Home" (Norton, $2.75), he tells us with many a jawbreaking scientific formula of protein yield per acre, etc. and etc., that science can so increase the crop production from land that there will never again be the need for a war of territorial expansion. That is, for expansion of agricultural land. In New Jersey they are already growing corn without soil in a cabinet full of trays, and the end-implications of such an advance, I dare say, indicate that Italy could grow all the cotton she needs in a building in Naples, and that Japan could make three acres of Tokyo suburbs equal the agricultural production of Manchuokuo. Possibly I exaggerate. But Dr. Willcox forecasts an immense increase of crop yield from any nation's acres, and that, he says, will make war unnecessary.

But just when you're feeling cheerful about your agricultural plank, you should cast an eye on the bristling mass of figures which Dr. Joseph M. Goldstein, Russian economist, has put into his book, "The Agricultural Crisis" (John Day, $4). In exportable wheat and such main staples, he shows, we have a disastrous overproduction right under our noses. Despite crop failures and planned limitation, the agricultural crisis of plethora, and starvation return for farmers, is a "permanently impending danger." We must leave Drs. Willcox and Goldstein to decide whether plenty means world peace or world poverty.

• • • •

NOBODY, balancing up these topics and a thousand more, could seemingly have much fun in the presidential seat. Nobody, that is, save the late Huey Long, whose posthumous little tale, "My First Days in the White House" (Telegraph Press, Harrisburg, $2) is one simple, delightful chortle of perfect accomplishment. Nothing could be smoother than the way Hoover takes over the Department of Commerce, or Al Smith the budget office, or the way the big bankers rally forward to share their wealth and the Drs. Mayo accept the medical responsibility for the Nation.

I certainly recommend the fantasy as an aperitif for all presidential aspirants. There's no sence in looking at any of these other books which make the world so difficult, and so real.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

It's All Knowing How.

England has been amazed by the performance of a man who walks across a bed of live coals without getting burned. That's nothing. President Roosevelt can do it.

A Yale professor says that 112,000 heads are cracked in this country every year. It may be those low car bodies. And, on the other hand, it may be just another argument in favor of putting beer up in cans instead of bottles.

Incidentally, canned beer is going to revolutionize fighting tactics at those old-fashioned picnics.

Tom Mooney has again been refused his liberty. He has been in prison for so many years that only the mathematicians can total them. Mr. Mooney was in tears after his latest defeat, but he must have his laughing moments, especially when he reads of those daily crimes by desperate criminals let off on parole after a few week-ends in the hoosegow.

Tentative Parley.

Only after dark
Dares Autumn to advance;
Only after dark
Plunges the rusty lance.
There is no yielding yet;
Only here and there
Out of the shadow-dusk
The eyes of change may stare.
Only in the night
Thrusts the inevitable blade;
Not yet remorseless chill
Across the earth is laid.

Culbertson on Bridge

Safety First.

WHEN I was learning to drive a car my teacher taught me all the finer points but forgot to show me how to use the brakes. That is why I am one of the fastest and worst drivers in America. In bridge also, not to know when to put on the brakes when partner flashes the red light [especially in a loud, emphatic tone of voice—Pppasss] stamps a player as a member of the Nation's largest fraternity, the Order of Errant Knights of Losing Bridge.

Self-preservation is the first law of bridge as of life. Back of every bid and every play we find the safety principle, "Am I safe and can I survive the invisible rocks of distribution or partner's stupidity?" is the first and most important question to ask one's self about any bid or play. Long and painful experience has taught me a number of simple rules and safety devices to avoid unjustifiable penalties. For instance, never stick out your head with a risky bid without an out. I am not saying "do not risk," for people who never take reasonable chances have equally no hope of winning, but you must have an out, a safe out, some other bid or support for partner's suit, or a conviction that the opponents, through sheer ignorance, will not double you.

But the best safety device I know is what I call the rule of two and three. It means that if your partner has passed or has not yet bid, you should not expect or gamble on more than two winners in his hand, if vulnerable, and three winners if not vulnerable. Thus, if your own hand contains seven winners, you can go only as high as three spades vulnerable, but you can gamble on four spades if not vulnerable. The reason for the rule of two and three is that your maximum justifiable loss, even to save a game, is 500 points.

There is much more to it than that, but if you stick to this rule you will save, in the course of your lifetime, even more than 1,500,000 points. I can guarantee it, for every time I break the rule I get the ax.

The Safety Play.

Before playing the trump suit or any suit, for that matter, visualize the possible ways in which the opponents' cards in that suit may be divided between their two hands. Then play as though you actually expect the worst possible division, unless, to make your contract, you must take a chance on finding the best.

The bidding (East-West vulnerable):

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1 Sp.	Pass	2 Ht.	Pass
2 N. T.	Pass	3 Sp.	Pass
4 Ht (Final bid.)

West opened the king of diamonds and, fearing that South might discard one or more losing diamonds on dummy's hearts, he continued with the ace. Then he led a low diamond to South's queen. South, who could discard his clubs on the heart suit, had to limit the loss of tricks in the trump suit to one trick. South led a low spade, West played the six, and South put up the king. The play defeated him. If he had thought out his problem, he would have dummy's nine of spades, for if West had all the outstanding trumps it would win and if East were able to take it, then there would be only two spades left, which would be taken care of later by the ace and king.

Today's Question.

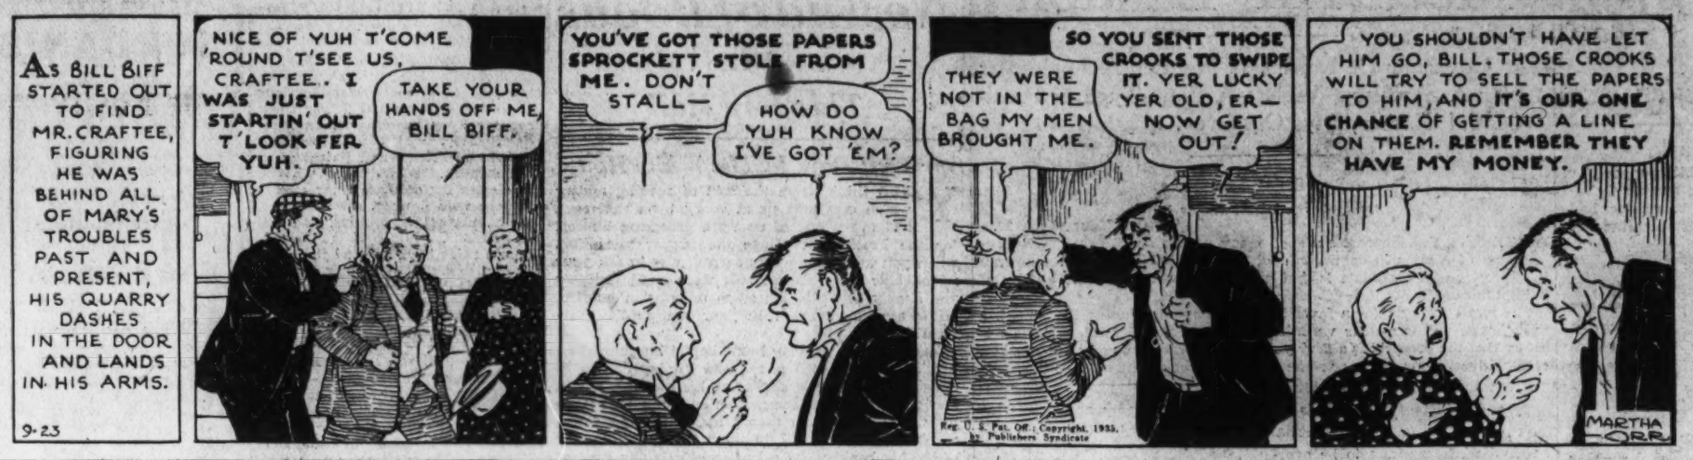

QUESTION—You hold ♠ K-Q-J-10-9-7-3, ♥ 3, ♦ J-9-4-2, ♣ 6. What do you bid, not vulnerable?

Answer—Four spades. With a long and powerful suit, but no outside strength, your best bet is to start with a high bid, hoping to shut out the opponents. But with the same suit, if you have another ace or a K-Q, the proper bid would be one spade.

Apple Mary — By Martha Orr

On the Air Today

CLEM McCARTHY has been selected to give the blow-by-blow account of the Baer-Louis fight tomorrow night. Following years of sports reporting on the West Coast, McCarthy first claimed radio attention when he described the Kentucky Derby several years ago. Since then he's handled practically every kind of sports air assignment.

And in addition, McCarthy has represented his versatility by participating in the Roosevelt inauguration ceremonies.

Edwin C. Hill, who certainly needs no introduction to any listener, will be with McCarthy to give the "color" and "background" material just before the fight and between rounds. As was observed in this space some time ago, it will be Hill's first assignment to fisticuffs.

A network of 84 stations will carry the hour from Yankee Stadium. All Red and Blue network stations of the National Broadcasting Co. have been bought and several in Canada and the Honolulu station for good measure. The time is 9 p. m., WRC and WMAL, tomorrow night.

• • • •

Tonight's juicy air morsel for the majority of listeners will be the appearance of Ethel Barrymore in the Radio Theater presentation of "Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary." Those who have no interest in whether Baer licks Louis or no will have their inning tonight for Miss Barrymore makes few air appearances. Her role is that of a popular London stage star who journeys to a country town to hear a poet read a play—and love steps in.

• • • •

Our ear-to-the-ground department reports that: Wendall Hall, the "Red-Headed Music Maker" of radio's early days, returns to a N. B. C. net October 1 . . . Pat Kennedy, whose band flopped in Pittsburgh so very soon after he organized it, is singing with Seymour Simons' band at the Stevens in Chicago (I personally find Simons' band better than some others now on the networks) . . . Annette Hanshaw switched nets after the "Caravan" went off the air last spring and didn't get her job back.

• • • •

It is also reported that Nelson Eddy and Richard Crooks, now in California making pictures, will be starred in two new shows from the Coast before long . . . and "G-Men" will go into a finale soon because of Department of Justice objection to commercial announcemnets.

• • • •

Next Friday night in the course of the regular Friday night spelling bee, WMAL, at 9, an announcement will be made of the date for the all-Washington spelling competition. On the date announced, the champion speller of the Washington spelling society will meet all comers. A special radio period is being given for this serious spelldown. If you are an unusually good speller or know of one, write Station WMAL and make application for the contest. Historic Furnace To Be Excavated

National Park Service Will Seek Data in Virginia.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., Sept. 22.—Excavations soon to be started on the site of the old Catherine Iron Furnace in Sposylvania County are expected to yield a wealth of information relative to the physical plan of the historic landmark.

The work on this location is the first of its type to be undertaken by the National Park Service in this part of the State. It will be developed under the direction of Architect S. M. Barnette and Historian O. F. Northington, jr.

The ruins are on the Old Furnace road 12 miles west of Fredericksburg, and constitute the best existing remains of an industry which flourished in this locality for 125 years prior to the War Between the States.

Attorney Smith Goes to "court" in a D. B. WORSTED-TEX

The world's a jury to Attorney Smith, which judges a lawyer's smartness by his appearance. In the illustration above our counselor is making a plea in a most important suit.

A lawyer's life is made up of suits, that's why progressive individuals choose the Worsted-Tex, which features the long, slenderizing silhouette of the new British Lounge Model.

This particular garment lends grace to any build of man . . . it is particularly notable for the way it adds phantom inches to the height of short men and its slenderizing effect on desk athletes who run a bit paunchy . . .

The jacket is a fraction longer than prevailing styles, and the waistline is set lower. This gives easy figure tracing lines. The sleeve heads are fullish and taper toward the wrist. This gives a neat appearance to the shoulders while providing ample roominess. Trousers are pleated and they, too, taper gracefully in the approved British manner.

Glance again at the illustration of Attorney Smith. He stands a great chance of breaking the lady's will. The same distinguished appearance can be yours for a fraction of what you'd expect to pay for a suit so fine.

New Treatment Clears the Skin Of Blackheads

Beauty Expert Employs Scientific Method in Attacking Blemishes.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

THEY'VE MET their match, those pesky blackheads. They might as well retire in shame for we found someone the other day who knows how to drive them away in swarms.

She's a very delightful young woman who has a small but attractive beauty salon close by Connecticut avenue. For years, she says, she has experimented on methods of removing blackheads. Some time ago she met a well-known New York dermatologist who had the blackhead situation under control. She studied with him, came back to Washington, and ever since has waged more than one winning fight with these ignominious little pests.

Before she starts working on you she studies your skin very carefully, for she says dry skin requires one method, oily skin another, and, of course, treatments must vary according to the individual.

If you have oily skin she'll begin your treatment with a remarkable clearing cream which feels cool as ice water when it's applied. It brings the circulation up and you can literally watch your cheeks take on a pinkish glow. This she massages in until there's the barest film of it left on your face.

If you have dry skin she uses another cream, equally soothing and effective. Both have a dissolving agent which actually melts the blackheads away. You can't expect them to disappear at one treatment, but you follow her directions and watch in wide-eyed amazement what happens.

These creams have the happy faculty of closing large pores, too—or rather, in aiding nature do that. For after they melt away the blackheads and the conglomeration of dust, dirt and make-up caked there, then the pores close with very little urging.

With these creams she uses—and advises you to use them at home—an excellent liquid complexion soap, together with a very fine brush.

You may have the treatments in her salon, or you may purchase the essentials for the treatment there, and she will gladly tell you how to use them yourself.

P. S.—Gentlemen, too, are urged to seek her aid if they're victims of the blackhead scourge.

For Sun-Dried Hair.

TO REPAIR the damage done your hair by the summer sun, try a certain oil shampoo. No matter how bleached out, and straw-like your hair is, you'll find this a delightful means of bringing it back to tip-top condition.

Lots of women like to "do" their own hair but they seek in vain for a shampoo that fulfills their hopes. They won't be disappointed in this one. It is modestly priced—60 cents a bottle, and especially prepared for re-conditioning hair and scalp.

After you've used it you'll be delighted with the soft feel of your hair, and its luxurious sheen!

Pearls Always Good Taste.

THE BUYER for the jewelry department in a downtown store is "right there" when it comes to knowing what jewelry to wear when, where and why.

It's this buyer who prophesies a big future for pearls. "They're going to be good!" he said, strongly emphasizing the "good."

"Lots of people are going to tire of the brighter more dazzling types of jewelry and they'll turn to pearls for relief. They're always good taste," he said. And isn't he right?

Just drop by and see the wide variety of lovely pearl jewelry he's displaying. It's a real treat for eyes made sore by the glitter and glamor of Renaissance brilliants.

Poets and Pioneers.

THE POET and the pioneer go down the world together,
Brave soul, timid soul, weak man, and strong;
One leaves his white bones along the trail he travels,
The other leaves his heart throbs put into a song.

Years may come and years may go, with the changes that they bring us,
Babylons may crumble and new Babylons arise,
But the ages that come after us will know as we are knowing
That white bones last forever and a good song never dies.

Ask Not for Freedom.

ASK NOT for freedom if you fear to weep,
Or dream of peace if terror makes you start.
No guardian angel sings upon the deep
Or leans from heaven to the humble heart.
The lion and the lamb no friendship keep,
One flees forever through the noonday shade;
The rabbit in the moonlight does not sleep
Careless of owls, of foxes unafraid.
Who asks for love will die upon the cross,
Who asks for peace will perish with his breath;
No festival will celebrate his loss,
No nation weep in sorrow for his death—
But where he lies is holy. There the sod
With sweetest grains will testify to God.

I Sang of Love.

I SANG of love when I was young;
The words came tripping on my tongue.
I thought I knew
All love could be, all love could do,
All love might mean, life's journey through—
I sang of love!

Now am I full of years, and fain
Would sing once more of love.
In vain
I seek the words whose power shall show
What love can mean; for now I know—
Love passes words!
I seek in vain.

But a Child Stands Naked.

FOR A CHILD a week is an infinite
Season of waiting for a promised
Occasion of joy. Grown persons
Have acquired with years an immunity in their blood
Against the sharp fevers of anticipation;
They have reared bulwarks in their bones against
The catapultings of disappointment and denial.
Against quarrels from the crossbow of fear;
They have taken the lacerations of defeat,
Encasing themselves in an armor of tough scar-tissue.

But a child stands naked to anticipation,
Open to the exquisite arrows of apprehension,
Defenseless before all the refined barbs of blind doubt,
And vulnerable to all the slow cruelty of fear.

Neckties to Be Gayer.

Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

Richard Stuart—Julia Calvert

Another romantic tie was forged between Maryland and Virginia in the marriage of Julia Calvert, of Mount Airy, estate of the Maryland Calverts, and Dr. Richard Stuart, wealthy young physician of Cedar Grove, a Virginia manor.

Kin of Lord Baltimore Wooed and Won by Young Doctor.

By Elisabeth Ellicott Poe.

ONE DOES NOT have to go far from Washington for historical romance. In the bordering States of Maryland and Virginia love stories of the great in the Nation's annals abound.

Often the stately manors of Maryland and Virginia have interwoven with their century-old boxwood and old-fashioned gardens of herbs and flowers the favorite love stories of the belles and beaux who in other days made the polished paneling resound with their laughter and gayety. Echoes may be heard of wedding bells that rang merrily through colonial nights, summoning the folk of the neighborhood for the general good times that preceded and followed old-time Virginia and Maryland weddings.

Such a treasure house of romance is Mount Airy, one of the Calvert landed estates not far from Washington. Mount Airy, like "His Lordship's Kindness" and "Woodyard," is situated near the waters of Piscataway which trail back nearly to the Patuxent River. It is on the hills about this tributary of the Potomac that this famous Calvert mansion is situated. In the old days it was the home of Benedict Calvert, son of the fifth Lord Baltimore. Often Gen. and Mrs. Washington and the latter's children on their way to Baltimore in their coach would stop overnight at Mount Airy. That is why young Jack Custis and Eleanor Calvert felt romance rising in their hearts on their frequent meetings.

Married, Moved to Virginia.

Finally they were married and went across the river to Virginia to live at Abingdon, within sight of the future City of Washington. But that is another story.

Eleanor Calvert had a brother named George. When he grew to manhood he married and among his children was a beautiful daughter named Julia. As little Julia played about the spacious lawns of Mount Airy, no doubt she dreamed of the Prince Charming who was to come and bear her away to his castle. Most maidens have such visions and sometimes they do not realize that the hero all the time has been within call.

Her Prince Charming, although she knew it not, resided at famous Cedar Grove, in Virginia, in King George County, which lies along the Potomac at the lower end of "Chotank," where the river has made a sharp bend to the eastward before taking its final course to Chesapeake Bay. It was a famed neighborhood, for as Paul Wilstach says in his "Tidewater Virginia:"

"After the first Fitzhugh families came to Chotank, the bearers of other distinguished names followed and made their homes there. The Washingtons built Hilton and Waterloo; Richard Stuart built Cedar Grove; the Alexanders built Galedon on one of the earliest grants on this river, and nearer Eagle's Nest, Col. Peter Ashton built Chatterton, though it passed later to a branch of the Tayloe family, of Mount Airy on the Rappahannock."

Family of Preachers.

Here lived the Stuarts, a preaching line of the Church of England in Virginia, and headed by the Rev. David Stuart, whose ministry at St. Paul's Parish, King Georges County, was known to have been in existence in 1722. After his death in 1749, when he was succeeded by his son, the Rev. William Stuart, who held the ministry until 1761. Beloved by their flock, the Stuarts built Cedar Grove, a fine old brick mansion, patterned on colonial lines. It stands facing the river at about 20 yards from the shore.

There was a born Richard Stuart, fourth in line from the Rev. David Stuart. He did not follow the clerical trend of his forefathers, but studied medicine. When he grew to manhood he was accounted one of the wealthiest men of the section and owned several thousand acres of land.

They Lived at Cedar Grove.

The day that Julia Calvert and Richard Stuart met their romance began. One day Dr. Richard Stuart rode into Maryland to Mount Airy and asked George Calvert for the hand of his beautiful daughter.

After their marriage the Stuarts came to Cedar Grove to live. Their circle of friends was wide and they were constant attendants at St. Paul's Parish Church, which had been presided over by Dr. Stuart's ancestors. In Civil War days, it was Mrs. Stuart who preserved the parish register and took charge of the ancient communion silver service belonging to the church.

In her delightful book, "Days in an Old Town," Mrs. Betty Carter Smoot says of Dr. Richard Stuart. "When I first knew him, though getting along in years, he was still a handsome man, tall and erect, and of courtly manner and bearing—a true example of the country gentleman of the Old South. His wife had been a noted beauty in her day, a fact well attested by a portrait of her which hung at Cedar Grove. Both she and her husband were the best of neighbors and the kindest of friends, and were of a presence and personality long to be remembered. Dr. and Mrs. Stuart had five daughters, but no son. Their daughter, Rosalie Eugenia, married her cousin, Turberville Stuart, of Chantilly, in Fairfax County. At her death their son, Richard Stuart 3d, became the owner of Cedar Grove."

Both Dr. Stuart and Mrs. Staurt were painted by Sully and for a long time these valuable portraits hung at Cedar Grove.

John Wilkes Booth on his flight from Washington after the assassination of President Lincoln visited Cedar Grove and Dr. Stuart gave him medical assistance, having no suspicion as to his identity. Booth then made his way across the Potomac back into Maryland, where he was later captured and shot by Sergt. Boston Corbett.

Master of Cedar Grove Unwittingly Aided Lincoln's Killer.

Earning Child Likes to Run Own Affairs

Sally at 18 was making from $10 to $12 a week. She always handed her earnings to her mother, who then gave her back as pocket money enough to pay for her lunches and carfare with a dollar extra for herself.

The family was not rich, but neither was it poor. There was always plenty of food and the house was paid for. Mrs. Smith did not even need to ask board from her children, and in point of fact, either banked Sally's wages or spent them on linen for the girl's "hope chest."

In time Sally began to resent the arrangement. Here she was working hard and unable to enjoy the fruits of her labor. She knew that her mother was saving it for her and collecting linen and knicknacks for her future home. But at the moment Sally was not thinking of the future. She wanted pretty clothes and money enough for movies and treats like the other girls.

The result was constant friction and bickering between mother and daughter which looked as if it would end in the daughter's leaving home altogether and living an independent life of her own.

There is no use in planning a child's future, no matter how reasonable the plans may be. And at 18 one is no longer a child, but an adult, presumably capable of organizing one's own life. No one can stop a girl or boy of 18 from leaving home, and if they are to be kept in the home they must be permitted the freedom which they can get elsewhere, especially if they are already self-supporting.

Man Says Attractive Women Spurn Him Because He Owns No Car.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am writing this letter in grateful appreciation of what your advice has done for me. Some time ago I wrote you a letter in which I complained of everything in general and your reply told me in very plain words that the fault was probably my own. Like bitter medicine, they were rather hard to take, but take them I did and they proved to be a very effective cure for the disease of "Narcissism" from which I was suffering very badly.

* * * *

At that time I had nothing. Now I have almost everything necessary to make a man happy: A good position, opportunities to enlarge my circle of friends, but best of all, faith in myself and an optimistic philosophy of life. The inferiority complex and host of other phobias which afflicted me have disappeared and I now find the world, in spite of its tragedies and disappointments, is not such a bad place after all. Your letter in The Post, replying to mine, possibly prevented a suicide, for I had been out of work for three years and was desperate.

* * * *

The direct result of your words was to make me realize the fact that life is hard, tense, incomprehensible of understanding, but that it is the fundamental duty of everyone to try to be a bit harder than life and "take it on the chin"

* * * *

Now, I would like to ask your advice in another matter, which has no particular relevance to the first part of this letter. Since I have been in Washington, where there are countless opportunities for matrimony, for which I am in the market, I have tried to establish acquaintanceship with young ladies who appear potentially congenial to me. But I find that after securing introductions in the proper manner their inevitable question is, "Do you have a car?" Upon my replying in the negative, they seem to lose interest.

* * * *

Now, dear Miss Haworth, I do not have a car, because I can not afford one, and the money which I might spend on a car goes into the bank, for, whatever my faults, I believe in sound economic policies. Furthermore, I shall never buy a car until I can pay cash for it and can afford to run it.

* * * *

I am asking you if you think there are any attractive young ladies left in Washington who would prefer a husband with sound financial policies to one who sees fit to run around in a gas wagon he can not reasonably afford. What is your candid opinion. MR. X.

The Pleasing Man.

DEAR MR. X: In view of the fact you've been so apt and manful a pupil, and have acted so courageously and so successfully to reorganize your life along more constructive and happy lines, it seems a shame that I should have to scold you once more. But scold you I must, in honesty.

Don't delude yourself with the idea that the sole reason attractive and marriageable young women are indifferent to your society is because you aren't a car owner. To attribute lack of personal magnetism to lack of specific worldly possessions is to take refuge behind a transparent alibi.

* * * *

It occurs to me that subconsciously you have chosen to invest women with mercenary motives in order to be relieved of the painful necessity of admitting frankly to yourself that you are at present lacking in persuasive personal appeal for women.

* * * *

It's just possible, of course, that you've addressed your attentions only to women who are so attractive and so sought after by men that they can afford to—and do—pick and choose their social escorts on a basis of material possessions as well as personal charm. Even so, there are few women—however attractive and popular—who are so coldly self-seeking that they will give consideration for worldly goods precedence over personal compatability when it comes to choosing a husband or even a best beau.

If women look you over with a speculative eye and decide against your company because you haven't a car, it probably means you are failing entirely to register as a man—as a social being who would be interesting to know.

* * * *

Now, to answer your question: It is generally conceded that woman is the practical-minded member of the human family and than man is the romantic and the visionary. If this is true, it follows that the average woman in Washington as elsewhere would consider herself the most fortunate of beings in acquiring a husband with sound financial policies—providing, of course, that she loved him. But there's the rub.

* * * *

In the abstract, woman may be more practical minded than man. But it also may be that she has become practical minded through sheer necessity of making the best of bad bargains. For, I repeat that woman, the individual, is seldom so practical minded that she chooses her husband for other than emotional reasons. But once united to him because of these emotional reasons, we find her reverting to basic type and hoping and striving for best results in the realms of financial and social security.

So, you may be the perfect-husband type. But before you can hope to prove it to some woman, you must first appeal to her imagination as the perfect-lover type. And lovers are not acclaimed so much for their material as for their pleasing personal attributes. It is the latter you must cultivate.

* * * *

And now you ask, what are these attributes? The answer to that, of course, lies with the individual. Every woman cherishes her own secret image of what is the ideal man for her, just as every man can, if he will, reflect that image back to some woman.

* * * *

Generally speaking, men who possess one, several or all of the following attributes of personality (briefly stated and liberally defined) enjoy the greatest favor among women:

1. Chivalry—thoughtfulness and kindliness in little things, bespeaking great respect and personal solicitude; pulling out her chair at dinner, the "right way" of walking along the street, sending her flowers, the easy, unself-conscious proffering of any incidental courtesy.

2. Understanding—the reverse of indifference or of self-centeredness, such as giving her opportunity to talk about herself, and listening with sympathy and appreciation; the quality which suggests one's ability to be a confidante and friend.

* * *

3. Masterfulness—the "real-man" sort of thing; seeing that she is comfortable and happy; making it perfectly clear that he likes her without apologizing for the emotion and yet without forcing it upon her attention; the ability to demonstrate devotion without permitting her to think for an instant that she can use him as a convenience.

* * * *

4. The romantic quality—the accidental posession of some mannerism or accomplishment which "clicks" with her secret notion of what is the ideal man: It may mean he dances well, or walks with virile grace, or has gray hair and a goatee or a voice with timber and depth, or strums a guitar or plays polo; or it may mean that he holds for certain ideals of conduct which she tremendously admires, or just that he is the kind of man with whom she can discuss poetry and books and her unhappy childhood.

* * * *

5. Personal magnetism—also called charm; that heart-lifting quality, at once restful and stimulating in a man causes any woman to turn to him for affirmation and appreciation; for effortlessly he convinces her, by the intuitive accuracy of his spiritual response (whether conveyed by word, action or glance) that she is a tremendously significant person. Our Opinion Asked on the Kind of Men Women Prefer to Marry.

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

HOME is where you can fit yourself into the sagging spot of your favorite chair and enjoy yourself at—whatever your own particular pleasure happens to be. We'll bet this husband has a good time at his house with a wife who redecorates to match his hobby.

* * * *

K. R. writes: My husband is a bookworm and a great keeper of newspaper clippings. Naturally that means bookcases all over the place, and I'm not complaining—I think books are mellow and lovely and livable in a room. Only I feel like a change to a lighter mood somehow. Our living room has always before taken its color note from the books, but now I'd like fresher, brighter colors if you think they would do in a room like ours. The furniture isn't any one style, but it's grandly comfortable, and, of course, we must keep good easy places to sit. Could you suggest a color scheme for changes that will involve painting the walls, new curtains and new chair coverings—the rug is somber but a rather good Oriental.

* * * *

ANSWER: Why not have white walls and white glass curtains, then the jolliest brightest of figured chintz for draperies and slip covers for all the chairs and sofas. You'll be surprised what a frivolous atmosphere this will give your room—yet it will be entirely harmonious with the books and the rug.

Luncheon Dish For the Pupil Is Easily Made

Escalloped Preparations Are Quickly Served and Are Nourishing.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THERE WILL be some change in luncheon menus now that the children have gone back to school. The woman who sends her youngster to school with his lunch under his arm will have the pleasure of one less meal a day to plan and to prepare. For herself she will find a bowl of soup, a salad and a glass of milk an easily prepared and sufficient luncheon.

It is a different story, however, for the woman whose children return home for luncheon. This mother will find it necessary to set a definite hour for luncheon each day, so that the children can sit down to their meal as soon as they return from school. The luncheon will have to be nourishing and yet not too heavy, easy to serve and easy to eat.

Escalloped dishes similar to the one suggested in today's luncheon menu can form an attractive dish for the school child's luncheon. They are quite easy to prepare and can be kept hot in the oven until ready to be whisked to the table in the same dish in which they were cooked.

Child of 5 to 9 Found to Like Mother Best

CHILDREN between the ages of 5 and 9 like their mothers better than their fathers, a survey at Teachers College, Columbia University, has shown. The study, which used 500 children as subjects, was made by Dr. Margaret Simpson, research assistant at the college.

As a possible reason for the children's preference, the survey says: "About the time both boys and girls reach 6 years of age the behavior of the fathers of the group appears changed. They play less with the children and punish them more, and their gifts to them become less frequent."

Analyzing the effect of punishment, Dr. Simpson asserts:

"Mother punishes as the need arises, whereas the father's punishment is often reserved for the evening, which is the only time he is at home. The small child has by that time, perhaps, forgotten the offense, and feels that the punishment is an injustice.

"The mother's threat, 'Wait till father comes home,' may influence also the child's idea as to which member of the family does most of the punishing. Some of these acts are reflected in the children's answers: 'Mother does not spank so hard,' 'Father uses a strap,' 'Mother only spanks if I am bad.'"

Good Nursing, Diet and Rest Halt Erisypelas

Skin Disease Caused by Germ; Spreads Swiftly in Tired Physiques.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

THERE are many contagious diseases, such as scarlet fever and measles, that are accompanied by skin eruptions.

Erysipelas, however, is a disease that involves the skin. It is due to a particular strain of the streptococcus and usually remains limited to this structure, although general symptoms are always present. It is extremely contagious and, for many years prior to the era of aseptic surgery, appeared at intervals in the surgical wards of hospitals. The streptococci probably gain entrance to the skin through a tiny wound or scratch, perhaps too insignificant to be noticed. This may occur through rubbing or scratching the nose or some part of the face with soiled fingers or fingernails. It is particularly prone to appear at the change of seasons when chilly days and nights follow hot periods. Colds, overwork, loss of sleep—in fact, all conditions that lower resistance are predisposing factors.

Rest in bed, a light, nutritious diet with an abundance of fruit, and good nursing constitute the best treatment. A gauze mask should cover the infected area. Antistreptococcic serum and serum obtained from patients who have recovered from the disease are of undoubted value. Ultra violet radiation and X-rays have both been used, and certain observers believe that ultra violet offers the greatest aid in controlling the spread of the infection and in shortening the course of the disease. Occasionally blood transfusions will change the picture from a severe illness to one that is relatively mild.

Club Leaders Seek to Heal Party's Split

Young Democrats of W. Virginia to Entertain Hostile Factions.

Holt Eyes Gubernatorial Nomination; Kump Still Defiiant.

By Robert H. Horner
A Special Correspondent.

Charleston, W. Va., Sept. 22.—The eyes of the State will be turned upon Bluefield Friday and Saturday, when the Young Democrats Club of West Virginia holds its annual convention with its main objective the healing, if possible, of the wide split in the party.

The program was arranged by Harry L. Snyder, jr., of Charleston, who has tactfuly separated the time for appearances on the platform of the leaders of the two main factions.

Gov. H. G. Kump, conservative leader, will be the last speaker on Friday evening's program, while Senators M. M. Neely and Rush D. Holt, joint leaders of the laborites, are slated for speeches Saturday afternoon.

Ralph M. Hiner, former speaker of the house, will deliver the keynote address. Hiner, formerly an ardent supporter of the Governor, is now looked upon as a political scout for Neely and Holt.

Party Split Widens.

Attempts at a lovefeast are expected to characterize the gathering, though old paarty leaders look upon the situation as hopeless. Gov. Kump, it was said, will never make terms with Senator Neely, while Senator Neely will be forced to hold back on account of his alliance with John L. Lewis, president, and Van A. Bittner, State representative, of the United Mine Workers of America, since both of these men have delivered speeches condemning the Governor and praising Senator Neely.

The split has been growing wider and wider during the last several weeks. Gov. Kump, in frequent statements, has fired darts at WPA and other Federal agencies in the State which appear to be under the domination of Neely and Holt.

Senator Alben W. Berkley, of Kentucky, keynote speaker at the Democratic National convention in 1932 will speak Friday evening, preceding Gov. Kump's address.

Fight Over President.

The real fight in the Bluefield convention is expected to arise over the election of a new president.

Senator Holt is said to be backing Abe J. Lubliner, of Bluefield, a former colleague in the House of Delegates for president, while the conservatives are supporting Herman J. Bennett, of Charleston. There is talk, however, that the Young Democrats may get together on a compromise and re-elect Snyder to another two-year term. Snyder is looked upon as one who strictly disregards factions in the party.

Other speakers scheduled are Representative John Kee, of Bluefield, who will preside at the banquet Friday night; Charles E. Hodges, of Morgantown, president of the State Senate, who with Gov. Kump and Senator Barkley will be banquet speakers.

John J. Pelter, of Logan, speaker of the House of Delegates and member of the conservative group, is scheduled to deliver an address Saturday afternoon.

Holt Is Watched.

Holt is being watched closely by older Democrats of the State who believe he is endeavoring to perfect an organization which would give him as much political control in West Virginia as the late Senator Huey P. Long wielded in Louisiana. A story is being told here to the effect that Holt plans next year to make the bold step of becoming a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor in spite of his seat in the Senate.

Frederick Vote On Sewer Bonds Due Tomorrow

Backers of $553,000 Issue Expect Referendum to Be Close.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., Sept. 22.—As the time for the vote on this city's proposed $553,000 sewerage bond issue nears the feeling of uncertainty among officials and others favoring the proposed $1,000,000 sewerage bond issue nears the feeling of uncertainty among officials and others favoring the proposed $1,000,000 sewerage project has become more pronounced. Frederick City will vote Tuesday on the bond sssue necessar yto finance the sewerage project, for which $452,000 has been allotted from PWA funds.

Although the Rotary, Lions and Kiwanis Clubs, the Frederick County Medical Society, the Elks and other organizations have indorsed the plan to install the sewerage system and have urged citizens to approve the bond issu, ecity officials and others active in support of the project fear the reference will be close.

There has been no indication of the sentiment o fthe rank and file o fvoters. Two of the largest property owners in the city, who rent more than 100 houses each, publicly declared favor of the sewerage system and bond issue. The third outstanding owner of low-rental homes has been a member of the Lions Club committee that has been supporting the project.

Members of the Elks Lodge have joined city officials in offering use of automobiles Tuesday to those who wish to go the polls to vote for the bond issue.

City officials hope an additional grant will be approved in Washington Tuesday. The Federal Government has approved a grant of 45 per cent of the cost. If an application now before the PWA is approved, bonds will have to be issued for only one-third of the estimated cost of the project. The additional grant requested would produce 66 2-3 per cent of the entire cost.

Hermit, on Death Bed, Directs Relatives to His Money Caches

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Sept. 22.—On his death bed, George Washington Loudenslager, 85, hermit on Fairview Ridge near Smithfield in Wetzel County, gave relatives directions for finding money he had secreted in various spots in the neighborhood of his one-room log cabin, and between $600 and $700 has been unearthed in two places. Relatives are looking for more believed hidden about the farm.

Funeral services were held yesterday for Loudenslager. Burial was at Logansport.

The aged recluse lay ill for five days in his cabin without food or water before he was found. Removed to the home of neighbors 2 miles away, he died a few days later.

Member of a pioneer family, the hermit was one of 13 children of Abraham and Barbara Morris Loudenslager, early Wetzel County settlers, the only one of whom now survives is Mrs. Alice Shupp, 76, of Mannington.

Loudenslager never married. He taught school 32 years and then retired about 20 years ago to lead a hermit's life in a tiny cabin on the highest point of Fairview Ridge. There he planted many varieties of fruit trees, cultivated strawberries and studied medicine, science and agriculture.

Farmers' Fair Opens Tonight At Hagerstown

80th Exposition to Run for Week; Harness Races a Feature.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Sept. 22.—Patterned after the agricultural fairs of a quarter of a century ago, but with many new features, including night shows, the eightieth annual Hagerstown Fair will open here tomorrow night and will continue through Saturday.

Neglected for many years when pari-mutuel races were featured here in the fall, the products of the farms and orchards of Washington and adjacent counties will be displayed prominently at the annual fair. The exhibits will include a live stock show, in which pure bred Percheron and other breeds of horses valued at $100,000 will be exhibited, as well as a colt show with animals raised by the county 4-H Club, a baby beef show by the Future Farmers of America with an auction sale following, a poultry show and a dog show.

The night shows, which will feature the first outdoor musical comedy ever brought here, will be a grandstand attraction. A gasoline rodeo will be staged Friday and Saturday afternoons. Harness races, revived last fall after having been replaced for many years by running races, will be the attraction Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday afternoons. Last year's fair netted a profit of $4,000 largely because of the harness races.

The Machine Gun Cavalry Unit of 65 men and 72 horses from Fort Myer, Va., arrived yesterday and will drill daily in front of the grandstand.

Tuesday will be "school day" when all school children will be admitted free to the grounds.

Andrew K. Coffman, who was re-elected president of the fair association, announced that the agricultural feature of the fair is being revived because it is considered one of the important agencies in the improvement of Washington County farms.

The fair is being held on the 30-acre tract purchased for that purpose by the fair association in 1880.

He was tried as a conspirator and after a number of years in prison his health broke and he was sent home to die.

Missing Wife River Victim, Her Kin Fear

Parents Will Go From Virginia to Carolina to View Body.

Mrs. Martin Was Driven Away Mysteriously in Auto Aug. 10.

By the United Press.

Waynesboro, Ga., Sept. 22.—Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Lotts, of the Madrid section of Augusta County, expect to go to Goldsboro, N. C., tomorrow to view the body of a young woman found in the Neuse River near Kinston, N. C., to determine if it is that of their daughter, Mrs. W. T. Martin, who mysteriously disappeared at Roxboro, N. C., August 10.

They will be accompanied by Deputy Sheriff William F. Coyner, of Augusta County, who was said here to have been in communication with North Carolina authorities.

Mrs. Lotts said she had been informed her son-in-law, Martin, that his wife was driven away by a man while he (Martin) was purchasing some cigarettes in a store at Roxboro. They were coming here for a visit with the Lotts, it was said, when they had trouble with their car and accepted a lift from a motorist.

Martin was quoted by Mrs. Lotts as saying it was a case of "kidnaping."

The body of the young woman whom the Lotts cuple will see was said here to have been found lodged against a Neuse River bridge by Graham A. Barden, a North Carolina legislator. It apparently had been in the water about a month. Burial already has been made.

Writes a Piece About the Fight Being Sold Out

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—There is considerable conversation and muttering in our town about the ticket situation for the big prize fight Tuesday night. The ticket situation is relatively simple. Mr. Mike Jacobs, who was a ticket speculator before he became a prize fight promoter, has a sell-out on his hands. For the first time in many years, a heavyweight prize fight is going to go clean. There are going to be more customers than there are seats, and of course for the precious little bits of pine, or folding chairs within the first six rows, the ratio is 100 to 1, a hundred persons for every seat.

In other words, platoons of our best citizens are sitting up on their hind legs, moaning piteously and begging Mr. Jacobs to sell them something up front for any price he may care to name, including the family jewels. As in all sell-outs, it has become a point of honor to be seen up among the big shots at any cost. The best seat in the house from which to see the fight is a front mezzanine box. But who can see you up there?

Now, this is the kind of situation that warms the heart of the ticket speculator. It is his business to create, if he can, a setup of that kind. It is for this reason that in show business, he journeys to Philadelphia or Atlantic City or New Haven or wherever the new show is opening to stake his judgment as to the show's eventual success. He gambles on that judgment, and "buys" the show for from eight weeks to six months. He gets all the good seats, and pays for them in advance. If the show is a smash hit he cashes in. Everybody, including the other agencies, have to see him for seats. If the show is a flop, he eats the pasteboards with a little cream and sugar.

Such a perfect situation from the speculator's side of view exists for Tuesday's prize fight. It is a smash hit before the curtain goes up. Everybody wants to be there. And Mr. Jacobs as the promoter had all the tickets. Which, then, will win the terrible struggle that at present must be raging in the soul of Mr. Michael Jacobs? The ticket speculator, or promoter? Can he resist such a blandishment as—"Now, lissen, Mike, never mind the price on the ticket, I'll pay $500 for a pair in the front row?" The habits of a lifetime are the difficult ones to overcome. And, besides, it is considered criminal ni our town to fail to take a sucker. The line-up of said suckers outside Mr. Jacobs' office is something incredible.

THERE is, of course, no guarantee that the purchasers will see anything for their money. Baer chucked it in his fight with Braddock. Tommy Laird, Pacific Coast newspaperman, cited four instances where Baer either chucked it or wanted. He may against Louis if the going gets too rough or he finds he can't hit him. But that isn't the point. They want good seats, advertising men, theatrical producers, actors and actresses, racketeers, night club operators, bankers, brokers, society people, newspaper publishers, movie stars and producers from Hollywood, prominent lawyers, politicians by the thousands, Government officials, radio big shots, nadjust common ordinary folk named Joe and Jane. The last two find the gonig particularly tough.

There are vague rumors, half confirmed, of a trcik arrangement of lettering and numbering the rows whereby first row ringside isn't, and even the number of No. 1 row of the new-fangled "press donor," or "patron press" seats is supposed to be preceded by rows mysteriously lettered W, X, Y and Z. Ahead of these will come the rows of working press seats, and finally the ring. I foresee that there will be some loud screams of anguish and harsh names called, when this affair is over, from citizens who will maintain that they have been misled as to the location of their seats.

I am vaguely disturbed by the title of those upfront tickets. "Press donor, what? and who? And why involve the press? Patron press is a more easily swallowed name for the gold-backed tickets. But press donor sounds as though somebody were giving something to the press. Most of the guys and dolls who sit in those seats wouldn't give the press the right time, or tell them the truth if asked a question.

THE point is that nobody will really know where he is going to sit until he gets there Tuesday when it will be too late to do anything but scream that he has been swindled. And if the fight is bad there will be a real old-fashioned ticket scandal. Where did I hear that the State athletic commissions had ordered in several rows of seats ahead of the mysterious "press donor" pasteboards? At any rate, something is brewing.

There is little to report about Joe Louis' last workout Saturday except that it was the smooth, easy wind-up of the perfectly conditioned athlete. It was the first time I have ever seen him hold back punches. He simply rolled through the workout for speed and timing and for one round opened up with savage hitting just to make sure the powder was dry. Off their last two workouts you couldn't possibly pick anyone but Louis to win. I still pick Baer.

French Beats Cy Blanton In Duel

Is Aided by Sensational Fielding; Rivals Miss 4 Chances to Win.

Chicago Ends Its Home Season; 20,000 Fans Are Turned Away.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Sept. 22.—The final act of the greatest home-town baseball show since 1916 was a finishing masterpiece today as the sensational Chicago Cubs blanked the hard-hitting Pittsburgh Pirates, 2 to 0, to run their spectacular winning streak to 18.

The triumph, gained after a thrill mound duel between Larry French and young Cy Blanton before a full house of 40,558 cash customers that jammed every nook and corner of Wrigley Field, assured the Grimm Cubs of at least a two-game edge over the Gas House gang from St. Louis when they start in their final five-game duel at Sportsman's Park Wednesday.

19 Out of 20 Games.

The sensational winning streak—a "Grand Slam" over four invading Eastern teams and two in a row over the Pirates—finished one of the most remarkable home pennant drives in the history of the game. Since returning to Wrigley Field on Labor Day, the Cubs have won 19 out of 20 games, suffering their single defeat at the hands of Cincinnati in the second game of the holiday twin bill. Only 21 pitchers were used during the mad rush and, with two days of rest before the final five-game drama against the Cardinals, the Cubs will make their last drive in excellent condition.

Fortune and luck not only smiled on the Cubs today but almost laughed out loud, but that's baseball. The Pirates outhit them, 9 to 7, and missed four excellent chances to win the game, holding the customers in their seats with a final, futile rally that was serious to the last put out. But French had what it took and, with the assistance of sensational fielding, forced the Pirates to walk their own plank.

Take Early Lead.

As in most of their victories over the long string, the Cubs jumped in front at the outset, scoring a run in the first inning that proved to be enough. Augie Galan, the mightly little left fielder, led off with a scratch infield hit and moved to second as Floyd Young let Billy Herman's hard smash bounce away from him for an error. Fred Lindstrom laid down a perfect bunt for a sacrifice, moving the runners to third and second.

It was at this point that the Cubs got their first and deciding break. Gabby Hartnett smashed a hard one to Arky Vaughan but, with almost a set-up double play ahead of him to retire the side without a run, Vaughan attempted to nip the fast hiking Galan at the plate. His throw was too late and Galan scored, leaving Herman on second and Hartnett on first. Demaree forced Hartnett and Phil Cavarretta struck out, to end the threat.

Bucs' Rallies Fail.

The Pirates had their big chances in the next two innings, but luck still rode with the rampant Cubs. In the second, they opened the inning with two singles and had runners on third and second with only one out and the bases jammed, and two out without getting a man home. In the third, the same thing happened—scoring chances galore—but each time French stiffened and the Cub secondary defense came through with spectacular stops. After those two big scoring opportunities had faded, French allowed but only four hits, one each in the fifth, seventh, eighth and ninth innings.

Only two hits were needed for the final cub run in the eighth. Lindstrom opened the inning with a single to left and took second on Harnett's sacrifice bunt, scoring on Demaree's double to left center. The run gave French just enough insurance and he survived the final pirate threat with great pitching. Padden opened it by drawing it by drawing a pass and took second as Tommy Thevenow batted for blanton and was out, herman to Cavarretta. Jensen got a scratch single to deep short, leaving Pirate runners on third and first, but the game ended as French struck out Dan Hafey and forced Lloyd Waner to ground out to Cavaretta unassisted.

A total of 202,283 fans, all but 12,500 of them cash customers, watched the final six games of the season at Wrigley Field against New York and Pittsburgh. The rush for seats was so great today that the gates were closed an hour and a half before game time. Approximately 20,000 were turned away.

Terry to Retire As Baseman Next Year

Giant Manager to Stick to Bench; Won't Trade Hubbell, He Says.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—Bill Terry, manager of the New York Giants, today announced his retirement as a nactive player at the end of the current season. If he can find a capable replacement, Terry intends to become a bench manager next season, devoting all his time to piloting the club.

Terry, one of the oldest first basemen in the National League in point of service, said he would continue to play to the end of the 1935 season and would remain on the active playing list until he found a substitute. He would not, however, consider himself as a "regular" player in 1936.

The Giant manager spiked rumors that Carl Hubbell, star Giant southpaw, would be traded before next season.

"I have no intention of trading Hubbell," he said, "as I believe that he will have a better year next year than he has had in 1935, which I consider was a very good one."

Terry made his announcement in a formal statement as follows:

"For your information I have decided definitely that I will retire as a regular player at the end of the 1935 season. I expect to remain on the active playing list until I secure someone capable of taking my place.

Denies Statement.

"After our meeting on the train coming from Chicago, I noticed that the papers carried a story regarding Hubbell, saying that no doubt he would be placed on the block during the winter. Please be advised that I have no intention of trading Hubbell as I believe that he will have a better year next year than he has had in 1935, which I consider a very good one. I was a little disappointed to read this article, inasmuch as Hubbell's name was not mentioned in our interview."

Terry made the first move in the direction of retirement yesterday when he remained on the bench during the Giants' double-header with Brooklyn, letting his understudy, Phil Weintraub, play first base. That change ended a streak of 296 consecutive games in which the Giant manager had played. The same arrangement was continued today.

Terry, who will be 37 years old October 30, first broke into organized baseball with Atlanta in 1914. He came up to the Giants from Toledo in 1923 and has been a member of that club ever since. In June 1932 he was appointed manager when the late John McGraw suddenly decided to retire and led the Giants to a pennant and the world championship the following season.

Sing Sing Cheered To 38-0 Triumph

The Black Sheep won, 38 to 0, from the Bronx Bulldogs of New York. A new star, Nin Cribben, was the backbone of the Black Sheep's offense. Cribben, a "freshman," replaced the graduated Alabama Pitts, now playing professional football with the Philadelphia Nationals.

Gates were locked at game time, despite a small crowd of about 200.

Tigers Quieted As St. Louis Wins Duel

Rookie Caldwell Wins Over Rowe, 1-0; Hits Rare as Diamonds.

By the Associated Press.

DETROIT, Sept. 22.—The American League champion Detroit Tigers got only three hits off Earl Caldwell, late of San Antonio, Tex., today and the St. Louis Browns won a brilliant pitchers' battle, 1 to 0.

Lynwood (Schoolboy) Rowe gave up only four hits and fanned ten Browns, but was guilty of a fielding lapse that cost him his chance for his nineteenth victory of the season. With Carey on third in the sixth inning, a high bounder from Burns' bat bounced off Rowe's glove. Burns was safe and Carey scored. Rode was not charged with an error.

Twenty-four thousand fans saw the final gam of th rgular sason at Navin Fild, bringing the attendance for the season to 1,170,000, a new record.

Nats Blast A's In Twin Bill, 10-2, 11-1

Newsom, Linke Effective; Estallella's Antics Please 10,000.

By Shirley Povich.

THE Washington Ball Club made good its escape from all possibilities of finishing in the league cellar with two highly conclusive victories over the Philadelphia Athletics yesterday.

Griffith Stadium was a proving ground for two of Philadelphia's rookie pitchers, one Herman Fink and one Alvis Veach, and among the items that were proved were (1) that the Nats could hit bad pitching and (2) that the Athletics couldn't hit good pitching.

The good pitching was supplied by Buck Newsom, who recorded his fourth straight victory in the opening game by the double-barreled figures of 10 to 2, and by Ed Linke, who was on the winning end of the 11-to-1 score in the second game. Newsom and Linke each limited the Athletics to eight hits.

Estallella Delights.

But the 10,000 in the stands paid mind most to the antics of Senor Roberto Estallella, the bow-legged Cuban third baseman who finds his public growing daily. Even his two errors in the last inning of the second game failed to dim his popularity with Griffith Stadium crowds.

They moaned with him when he struck out in the first inning, and they applauded when he coaxed walks in his last four times at the plate between reproving looks at Umpire Geisel, but they burst out in a roar of delight in that sixth inning when the irrepressible Cuban slithered across the plate in a needless slide.

Estallella was on second base and Kress on first when Holbrook doubled against the center-field wall. Estallella held his base as the ball descended but Kress was away winging and both runners found themselves on second. Then ensued a race to the plate, with Kress dogging the Cuban's footsteps, only to see Estallella slide across the platter despite the fact that there was no play at home. Kress, behind him, scored standing up, after barely avoiding stepping on the Cuban.

Drives in Three Runs.

In that first game, Newsom wielded a potent bat as well as a powerful arm. It was his screaming double over Cramer's head with the bases full that drove in three of the four runs that put the Nats in a 4-0 lead in the second inning Young Fink had walked Travis, pitched a single to Bolton and walked Milhalic to set the stage for Newsom's blow.

The A's put themselves back in the ball game in the third inning when they scored two runs on singles by Richards and Newsome and

Richmond Loses 9 Regulars; Back Field Is Chief Problem

By Paul W. Ferris,
Post Sports Editor.

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 22.—The transition in the practice of football at the University of Richmond enters its second phase this fall when only George Lacy remains of the old Frank Dodson regime to contribute to the performance of a Glenn Thistlethwaite-coached Spider eleven.

Less Arduous Schedule.

The present material, however, lacks only dependable back-field performers to shape up as equal in ability to any previous Spider squad; and it is strictly the product of Thistlethwaite, former Big Ten mentor at Northwestern and Wisconsin. Also, it faces a slightly less arduous schedule than that of 1934 when Cornell, Georgetown, V. M. I., Wake Forest, Davis-Elkins and William and Mary were defeated and only Emory and Henry was able to gain a decision over the Red and Blue.

The line, averaging some 195 pounds from end to end, offers little concern, providing necessary speed can be injected into some of the guards. Co-captain George Lacy, Hal Sutton and Murril Howe are experienced wingmen and will be aided, when required, by Harry Jaffee and Sophomore John Speir, both 180-pounders.

200-Pound Tackles.

Letterman Tom Todd and Chuck Siddall, transfer from Carroll College of Wisconsin, are a pair of tackles scaling well over 200 pounds each and capable of thwarting the line attack of any opposition they will confront this campaign. Joe Straughan and Clive Kern lack experience, but have the weight and strength to develop into capable understudies.

There is a plethora of sturdy guards in veterans Mike West, also being tried at tackle; Nealy Godsey, Dick Todd, "Hoss" Walton, Bill Via and Axel Schneck. All but Godsey and Schneck tip the beam at from 180 to 195 pounds. Lyle Graham, 200-pound regular of last season, and Allan Nixon 190-pound freshman tackle of 1934, promise to carry the pivot burdens without additional relief.

Lack Good Punter.

The back field situation, however, is calling for considerable experimentation except at the field general post where Dave Umansky and Bill Robertson remain for further duty. Espcially annoying at present is the lack of a dependable punter to step into the shoes of Jack Dobson or Jimmy West.

Co-Capt. Ed Schaff appears to have clinched the full-back job after being shifted from his center assignment of last year. He has been displaying unusual speed for a former lineman and is rapidly learning to kick and pass. Frank Tymosko, 196-pound sophomore, whose eligibility has only this week been cleared up, needs only more polish to become one of the greatest driving backs in the State.

Kielpinski to Play.

Leonard (Kelly) Kielpinski, last year's freshman full back, is running singles at the blocking back position and seems to have clinched a starting assignment. Bobby Vaughan, light but wiry brother of the departed Freddy, is definitely in the running for ball-carrying tasks. Last year as a sophomore he

Rumors Keep Baer Money Hidden

Undercover Stories of Max's Condition Hinders Betters.

70,000 Tickets Already Sold; Million in Cash Expected.

By Bill McCormick.
A Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK Sept. 22.—Betting on the fistic fuss between Joe Louis and Max Baer here Tuesday night has reached the doldrums, with thousands of dollars finding no takers, largely because of persitsent reports that all is not well with Maximilian Adelbert.

An early 2-to-1 favorite, Louis was gradually hammered down to an even-money bet a few days ago, with most of the potatoes risked on Baer being dumped on the market by the professional checker-vested gentry who are supposed always to know everything before it happens.

Suddenly the flood of Baer money was shut off, and large contingents of out-of-town wagerers who favor Louis have been unable to unload. The shift in sentiment has caused Louis to be installed a 9-to-5 favorite with no important money in eight and probably will result in the boy from Detroit entering the ring a favorite at 2 to 1 or even better.

No definite explana.ion is forthcoming from those who so suddenly decided Baer is not a sound financial risk but one is told by the "smart money boys" that something is wrong with Baer something that will make him a ba dinvestment in the forthcoming fray.

Trained Poor..

Some speculate that the East's sure-thing gamblers have changed their opinion of Baer's chances because of the poor showing he has been making in training where his sparmates have been battering him unmercifully.

Others contend that the erstwhile Livermore larruper's mental attitude reflects lack of confidence and worry that may break him up physically before the fists of Louis get the chance. Still others believe that Baer is a hollow shell, that his legs are gone. The writer knows there has been an air of discord and dissension at Max's private headquarters in Speculator.

Regardless of Baer's condition, or Louis' condition, the box office for this fancy-capturing fight remains decidedly healthy. More than $800,000, representing 70,000 heads, has been poured into the coffers already, presaging the first million-dollar gate since Dempsey and Tunney fought in Chicago eight years ago.

The stands at the Yankee Stadium where the delectable bit of brawl will be staged, seat 69,650 people. There will be 22,000 seats laughingly called "ringsides" on the playing field. With standing room being retailed at $5 per standee, it is conservatively estimated that a total of 100,000 will witness the glove-waving contest—a new record for New York. Tuesday night's engagement also will be the fifth million-dollar gate affair in the history of the ring.

9 P. M. Is Time.

The big show is scheduled to start exactly at 10 o'clock, daylight saving time, which is 9 o'clock in Washington, but permission has been granted by the New York commission to Max and Joe to go to work as early as 8:30, daylight time, if the weather is threatening.

More police even than were assigned t othe Louis-Carnera contest will be stationed in and around the

Maryland—Its All-Time Honor Roll

Woods, Brewer, Mackert and McQuade Win Back Field Posts.

By George Trevor.

WHEN you think of Maryland football your thoughts turn to Curley Byrd, the dynamic coach and athletic director, who lifted the Old Liners from the minor league, so to speak, and placed them among the gridiron's elite. Under Byrd's dynasty from 1912 through 1933, Maryland became a dreaded visitor in the Yale Bowl. Byrd is now acting president of the University at College Park. He personally developed every single one of the all-time Maryland players listed here. Nine of these honor men never played football before entering the College Park institution.

Zeke Bailey, a Marine Corps lieutenant today, was the Old Liners' greatest center. Oddly enough, four other Maryland all-timers are also lieutenants in the Marine Corps—Burger, McQuade, Williams and Hough.

It would be hard to find a more rugged pair of guards than Omar Crothers and Jess Krajcovic. Each was a bear cat at heading interference.

Lyman Oberlin, key man on the famous 1916 line, was a bruising, durable tackle. He is a patent lawyer now in Washington. Joe Burger opened the holes for McQuade against Yale's great 1923 team and gave the Elis a bad hour in the bowl. Ralph Into might have been Maryland's greatest tackle had he not transferred to Yale where he earned All-America laurels.

There was only one Bill Supplee at end, an amazing receiver of passes who flitted like an oriole hither and yon to keep his rendezvous with the ball. Supplee made the All-America team in 1923 and is a professor of chemistry at Maryland today.

Al Woods, the fleet and heady skipper of the 1932 team, would make an ideal quarter back for the Old Liners with Roy Mackert doing the heavy duty blocking and Jack McQuade firing those bullet passes on the run. McQuade whipsawed Yale's 1923 team to a frazzle for three periods, mixing in knifing dashes with flat tosses to Supplee. He outshone Yale's Bill Mallory that afternoon and many critics think he should have made the All-America team ahead of Memphis Bill.

Brooke Brewer, now a member of the advertising department of The Washington Post, was Maryland's most versatile back. This whippet ran the 100 yards in 9.8 seconds and once past the secondary defense was gone, but not forgotten.

Bailey Greatest Center of Old Liners; Zuke Supplee Best End.

Curley Byrd calls him "the greatest all-around kicker in the history of American football." Against Syracuse in 1920 Brewer averaged 70 yards on 7 punts and kicked a wide angled field goal to beat the Orange. Playing in a rain storm on a field ankle-deep in mud, Brewer booted two field goals from a 35-yard mark against North Carolina State in 1921. Al Sharpe, who refereed this game, said the odds were 50 to 1 against Brewer for the ball was waterlogged and caked with slime.

Snitz Snyder tore Yale's 1926-28 lines to shreds and enabled the Old Liners to down the Elis on each occasion. Bozie Berger, a major league ball player now, scored two touchdowns on Yale in 1929 and deadlocked the Blue, 13 to 13. His basket ball and baseball talent helped him freeze onto passes. Maryland has never known a more versatile athlete.

Thomson, Picard Rally to Defeat Houghton, Diffenbaugh 1 Up

Visiting Pros Win Match On 16th

Shoot Birdies at Hosts After Being 3 Down at End of 6 Holes.

By Dave Herman.

THREE down after six holes of play, Jimmy Thomson, the Ridgewood, N. J., seige gun, and Henry Picard, Hershey, Pa., staged a spirited comeback yesterday at Indian Spring Country Club to defeat George Diffenbaugh and Al Houghton, host club pros, 1 up, in a return exhibition match before a disappointingly small crowd of several hundred.

Slow in getting their games under way, Thomson and Picard cut away their opponents' first nine lead of 2 up with some sensational sub-par golf that was just too much for Houghton and Diffenbaugh.

After going out in 38, three over par, with only one birdie to show, that at the second hole, where he canned a 25-foot putt to square the battle, the husky Thomson unleashed a withering barrage of birdies and pars on the back side to blast out a 33, three under par, and finish with a 71, even par and low for the day.

Picard Shoots 73.

Picard, who played poorly on the first nine, taking a 39, rallied for a 34 on the incoming nine and had the next best score, while Diffenbaugh aggregated 74 and Houghton, 75.

In sharp contrast to the play of both Thomson and Picard on the first nine was their steady sub-par performance for the last nine holes. Starting with the tenth, Thomson picked up four birdies, and stood on the seventeenth tee needing par in for a 32 and a 70. He overshot the green, chipped back nicely, but missed a 4-footer and his par. On the home hole Thomson's putt for a birdie from 20 feet stopped inches short of the cup.

The long-driving Thomson had difficulty controlling his approacn shots on the first nine, although he drove for alarming distances, ripping off a 325-yarder on the 430-yard fifth, and connecting for a 310-yard wallop on the 355-yard fourth.

315-Yard Tee Shot.

On the thirteenth Thomson's tee shot was 315 yards, just to the right of the green, and on the fifteenth, 483 yards, he used a five iron for his second, but was short of the green. He got a birdie 4. Two long wallops on the 525-yard sixteenth found his ball just 20 yards from the carpet, and he pitched 10 feet past the pin and holed his putt for a birdie 4—the same hole on which Picard, putting from 15 feet, got his birdie. Their birdies on the sixteenth climaxed a strenuous ten-hole comeback, and provided the invaders their margin of victory.

Two pars gave Houghton and Diffenbaugh the lead on the first hole, but Thomson squared it at the second with a birdie 3. Diffenbaugh won the third with a par, and holed a 25-footer for a birdie 3 on the fifth to put his side up. Both Thomson and Picard were trapped at the sixth, and the local boys won it par 3s. Picard, on the green in 2, took the seventh with a birdie 4, and Diffenbaugh and Houghton led 2 up at the turn.

Thomson sank an 8-footer for a birdie 3 on the tenth, chipped dead for another birdie and win on the thirteenth to square the match. Houghton halved the fifteenth with a birdie 4, but the home pair was unable to match the birdies Thomson and Picard fired on the sixteenth.

At the Post . . .

with Bill Bennings.

Havre de Grace, Sept. 22.

Dear Al:

We had the first and last winners yesterday but between the two we got what the little boy shot at. It looked like a big day when Lady Flinders stepped home at a $17 mutuel, but then a lot of horses that should have just didn't, and those that should not have just did. But that, my friends, is what makes horse racing. Jockey DeCamillas will not b seen in silks for some time. It seems the stewards did not like the way he rode Tiempo in that Darkling race Friday and his case has been referred to the racing commission. Incidentally, when Jockey Reid, the colored boy, won with Merely yesterday, it ended his apprenticeship. He is now a full-fledged jockey and will not get the five-pound allowance. Vanderbilt, with two of the $10,000 races already safely stowed away, seems to have a lock and key on the Havre de Grace Cup race next Saturday, which also carries tend grand in added money. He has Discovery fit and rarin' to go. Black Helen looked as if she did not like the track. She has been running on those hard ovals around Chicago and I'm told she's at her best on the lightning strips. BILL.

First race—Glowing Coals ran a nice race the other day, showing sudden improvement that might lead to a victory in this maiden company. Gets in with feather weight. Parva Stella has been trying for a long time. Still Alarm is well liked by the clockers.

Second race—Vanda Cerulea turned in a nice effort in her victory last week and anything of the sort would find her scoring in this field. Boocord appears to be the one to beat. Veritas' last was a beaut. May be a keen factor here.

Third race—Lovely Girl has done all asked of her at this course. She turned in a neat victory over as good as these last out and should repeat. Beth Bon might have won opening day but for bolting into the fence. Clear sailing tomorrow will make this one dangerous. Gilt deserves a money ranking.

Fourth race—Dowdy Dell and Wise Prince should battle it out for the main award in this field. Both are speedy and fit. Marcella Miss has had Clocker Mike's eyes popping in the morning and may be a surprise package. Boston Brook would move up in the mud.

Fifth race—If Triolet fails to take this cheap field into camp, I'm going to see that the glue factory gets something to work on. Dunair has good half-mile form as a recommendation. Sun Way was leading at the head of the stretch and is a threat here.

Sixth race—If Dark Law can be urged to break with the field this one may take the long end of this purse. Peters is slated to ride and I know of no better post boy. Capstan and Arab for the rest. The latter might go better at a longer price.

Seventh race—Zembla evidently likes the course as that last victory suggests. I'm not particularly crazy about Phillips' riding but the mare is too fit to be passed up. Tiempo for the place and Pencader to show. The last named has been working well and would be dangerous if the top two faltered.

Southern Grid Teams Shine In Openers

No Conference Eleven Suffers Defeat in Initial Game.

By the Associated Press.

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 22.—Neither the lateral's trickery nor dame fortune's usual perversity in opening games harmed Southern Conference football teams in their initial contests with the half dozen early starters today safely past their first tests.

True enough Virginia got no better than a scoreless tie with William and Mary but the Cavaliers, jubilant over preserving the tradition which through the years has said that no Indian football team shall score on them, showed surprising strength as they outpowered their heavily favored opponents.

Much of the wailing came from Blacksburg where Virginia Tech's Gobblers — facing the powerful Clemson Tigers in next Saturday's Conference headliner—had to fight with their backs to the wall during most of the second half to protect their scant 7-0 margin over a scrapping Roanoke College eleven.

Duke Shows Well.

Duke started its championship campaign with a second half blast that overpowered Wake Forest, 27 to 7, while Clemson scored a 25 to 6 victory over an outclossed Presbyterian eleven. Virginia Military, in fine early season form, hurdled Hampden-Sydney, 26 to 0, while Don McCallister inaugurated his coaching regime at South Carolina with a 33 to 0 triumph over Erskine.

Buoyed by the fine exhibition against Hampden-Sydney, Virginia Military prepared for next week-end's meeting with Tulane at New Orleans while Virginia hoped to swing into the victory parade at the expense of Hampden-Sydney.

Meanwhile four late starters, all of them among the championship favorites, made ready for their first tests. North Carolina probably had the hardest assignment against the Wake Forest team that outplayed Duke last night during the first half before the Devils turned on the power. N. C. State will open against Davidson at Greensboro while Maryland drew St. Johns and Washington and Lee will start its championship defense against Wofford.

Nats Trounce A's In Double-Header

Cramer's double, but the Nats bounded in front, 7 to 3, in their half of the inning, when Travis, Powell Bolton and Mihalic ripped off singles.

That was Fink's farewell inning, but with Newsom breezing along in the comforts of his huge lead, the four-hit ball pitched by Newsom over the remainder of the route didn't matter much.

Forces Over 3 Tallies.

In the second game, young Veach had a four-inning tenure. Kress' triple tied the score for the Nats at 1-1 in the second inning and it was 4-1 after the third in which Veach forced over two runs after filling the bases on an intentional pass to Travis. Kress drove in the third run of the inning.

It was the second of the six consecutive innings in which the Nats scored in quantities ranging from one run to three runs. Veach gave up three more runs in the fourth, which Linke launched with a double, and Carl Doyle was powerless to halt their assault.

Giants Down Dodgers; Terry on Bench in '36

New York, Sept. 22 (AP).—Clyde Castleman's pitching and Travis Jackson's hitting carried the Giants to a 5-to-2 victory over the Dodgers today in the "rubber" contest of their three-game series. The Giants were spurred by Manager Bill Terry's announcement that he intended to become a bench manager next season, retiring as a "regular" player.

Castleman pitched 5-hit ball for his fifteenth victory of the season. Terry again remained on the bench, giving Phil Weintraub a chance to earn the job as regular first baseman next year.

Cardinals Top Reds Twice; Cut Lead

Rout Rivals in First, 14-4; P. Dean Gives Three Hits in Final.

By the Associated Press.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 22.—Dizzy Dean pitched the St. Louis Cardinals to a 3-to-1 nightcap victory over the Cincinnati Reds today, after the Red Birds had clubbed out a 14-to-4 win in the first game.

The double conquest cut the Chicago Cubs' first-place lead over the Cardinals to three games.

Dizzy's victory was his twenty-eighth of the season and the forty-seventh for the Dean Brothers. Each has lost eleven.

Jim Collins' double, scoring two runs in the eighth inning, was the decisive Cardinal hit. Each team scored once in the opening frame, Cincinnati on Goodman's double and Bottomley's single and the Cardinals on Martin's single and Frisch's triple.

Bettors Against Louis Hard To Locate

Rumors Concerning Max's Condition Again Up Odds Against Him.

fight site, a precaution that may prove wise if the quiet fears of Louis' handlers are realized. Without saying much publicly about it, Louis' entourage half expects Baer to attempt to incapacitate their charge by low blows, for which a fighter is penalized only a round in thsi State.

They pointed out that Baer can, under the rules, severely injure Joe with one or more blows below the equator without being disqualified, then proceed to finish the Detroit destroyer with a clean shot. Buddy Baer, Max's big little brother, employed the same tactics in polishing off Jack Doyle, who fights tenor, in a recent contest. The fears of Louis' handlers on this score are further heightened by the fact that Jack Dempsey, who on occasion was very careless with his body punches, is to second Max.

The whole matter may be straightened out when the fighters are called before the boxing commission Tuesday to be weighed in and instructed. Prior to the Louis-Carnera affair, the commissioners read the riot act to both fighters, directing their remarks almost directl yto poor Primo, who is a great mauler. Commissioner Bill Brown has stated publicly Baer will not be allowed to employ Pier 6 tactics, but hasn't said what steps will be taken to keep the contest from degenerating into barroom brawl.

Baer will break camp at Speculator tomorrow, flying down to New York despite the objection of Promoter Mike Jacobs, who would rather see Maxie stay on the ground until all the cash customers are in the house. A squadron of motorcycle police and flocks of high-powered cars will be held in abeyance to whisk Baer to Gotham should the flying weather be not so good.

Louis will remain at Pompton Lakes until the day of the fight, coming here just in time to be weighed in at 2 o'clock. From the weighing-in he will go to a private apartment in Harlem, to await the call to arms.

Louis' bride-to-be, 19-year-old Marva Trotter, of Chicago, will watch the groom-to-be in action, but neither Mrs. Bater, the former Mary Ellen Sullivan, of Washington, who never has seen a prize fight, or Mama and Papa Baer will witness the embroglio. Louis still intends to be married the day after the fight, and still is keeping the time and place of the ceremony a dark secret.

Cleveland Divides Twin Bill With Sox

Chicago Wins 2d, 9-2, to Break 8-Game Streak.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Sept. 22.—The Chicago White Sox came back, strong behind Monte Stratton's steady pitching today to stop the Cleveland Indians' eight-game winning streak with a 9-to-2 victory, after dropping the first game of a double-header, 6 to 3.

Stratton yielded three hits in the first inning, which accounted for Cleveland's two runs, but the Indians got only five after that, and never had a look-in. Cleveland's seventh-inning rally won the first

Spiders Lose 9 Regulars From '34

calmly place-kicked the 2 extra points that beat Georgetown, 14 to 13, after the Spiders had trailed, 13 to 0, with six minutes to play.

Other likely backs include Bill Gaylord, a junior college transfer; Barty Tenore, light but a vicious blocker; Sophomore Pete Jostin, speedy Joe Briggs and Randy Tabb, the best punter on the squad, who is a product of the campus intramural touch football program.

Roberts Is Lost.

In addition to Dobson, Schulz, Leverton, West and Freddy Vauhan, back-field losses include the fleet and flashy Ernie Brooks, ineligible, and Paul Roberts, who directed last year's good freshman team and did practically all of its kicking, passing and running. Roberts developed bad health and did not return to school.

Thistlethwaite is being assisted by Russ Crane, former All-American guard at Illinois, while the freshman, as usual, are being tutored by the capable Mac Pitt and his aid "Cotton" Landrum.

Plenty of Thrills.

Lacking the versatile backs of last season, it is thought likely that Thistlethwaite may depend more upon the defensive ability of his line this year, although his predilection for forwards, laterals and reverses from double and triple wing-back formations assures a sufficiently startling offense to give the fans plenty of thrills.

William and Mary, V. M. I., Georgeown and North Carolina State are the most important games on a current schedule that also includes Randolph-Macon, Roanoke, Emory and Henry, Franklin and Marshall, and Hampden-Sydney.

Big Ten Crown Foreseen for Ohio State

Speed, Power, Deception to Reign; Host of 1934 Veterans Return.

By the Associated Press.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Sept. 22.—Speed, power and deception—and the greatest of these is deception—are the weapons Coach Francis A. Schmidt has furnished his Ohio State gridders for the 1935 football wars.

With two weeks of practice completed, there is very little viewing with alarm on the Buckeye campus, but there is plenty of pointing with pride.

Schmidt, taciturn Texan, admits "we will have a pretty good team." That is tantamount to paeans of praise from any other source.

Accused of having the Western Conference championship "in the bag," Schmidt's lone retort has been, "Well, we'd better play those other teams before we claim any titles."

Two First Teams.

The Bucks will have no "first team." There will be two elevens, with parts of one interchangeable with parts of the other.

No matter what combination he uses, Schmidt's line will average about 198 pounds, and the back field about 185. Three of his backs are good kickers, and five of them are rated as exceptional forward passers.

In addition, Schmidt has a flock of boys who just missed making a letter a year ago, and one of the finest crops of sophomore talent ever assembled here.

9 Lettermen Gone.

Nine lettermen were graduated, but only three played a heavy part in the 1934 campaign. They were J. Regis Monahan, captain and guard; Damon (Buzz) Wetzel, and John McAfee, full backs.

Just now Schmidt's lone trouble seems to be at full back. For that job he has Johnny Kabealo, regarded as one of the best kickers in the Big Ten, from last year, and "Jumping Joe" Williams and Jim McDonald, a pair of husky sophomores. Frank Fisch and Tony Antenucci, a couple of last year's ball-toters, also are in the full back fight.

At quarter back are Stan Pincura, regarded as the ace of the signal-calling corps; Tippy Dye, the 142-pounder whose passing and field generalship astounded the Western Conference a year ago, and Fisch. The half backs include the veterans Dick Beltz, Johnny Bettridge, Frank Boucher and Dick Heekin.

Others Return.

Other lettermen are Trevor Rees, Merle Wendt, Sam Busich and Frank Cumiskey, ends; Charles Hamrick, Gilbert Harre and Arnest Roush, tackles; Inwood Smith and James Karcher, guards, and Capt. Gomer Jones, center.

While Schmidt is expected to rely on the aerial fireworks which upset the Big Ten a year ago, he also has developed a series of power plays to fall back on if the passing attack bogs down.

The schedule:

October 5, Kentucky; 12, Drake; 19, Northwestern; 26, Indiana.
November 2, Notre Dame, 9, Chicago; 16, Illinois; 23, Michigan.

Tourists Spent $4,000,000,000 For Vacations

37 Million Toured Nation for All-Time Record, A. A. A. Reports.

Thirty-seven million motorists toured the Nation's highways and spent $4,000,000,000 during their vacation this year.

And this, according to figures of the American Automobile Association, is an all-time record. The 1935 urge to travel struck more persons than in any previous year, the club reported.

"Much of this vacation travel moved in a northerly direction," club officials announced. "New England reported a 30 percent increase in tourist business and the Pacific Northwest attracted unprecedented patronage."

Works Projects Seen.

American motorists, however, ventured far afield in their ramblings. Unusually heavy travel was noted at the Canadian border and motoring abroad jumped to "phenomenal proportions," the motor club reported.

Public works projects throughout the country appeared to attract summer sightseers who wanted to "see America first." Mountain, lake and seaside resorts reported record crowds. Money expended by the tourists was catalogued by the club as follows:

Transportation costs—$800,000,000.
Hotels and other accommodations—$800,000,000.
Retail stores—$1,000,000,000.
Food—$830,000,000.
Theaters and other amusements—$325,000,000.
Confectioneries and refreshment stands—$245,000,000.

Safety Drive Opened.

The AAA also announced plans for a Nation-wide campaign to safeguard school children. Under a school safety program, affiliated clubs throughout the country will promote efforts to protect children going to and from schools and educate them in the necessity for traffic caution.

"With thousands of youngsters being enrolled in school for the first time, the AAA has issued a Nation-wide appeal to every parent and motorist to co-operate in the school safety program," a statement read.

Woodberry Team Faces 10 Games

Only Five Regulars Return to Virginia School.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Woodberry Forest, Va., Sept. 22.—Thirty-six candidates for the Woodberry Forest football team have been at work twice daily since September 16 in preparation for a difficult schedule of ten games. Walter Jones, tackle; Billy Coddington, guard; Roscoe Willett, center, and C. J. Hine and Mosby Cardozo, backs, are the returning lettermen around whom the team must be built. Eleven other members of the squad gained a little experience last season as reserves. Indications are at present that the starting line-up will be lighter than that of the past four or five years.

The schedule—September 28, Fishburne Military School, Waynesboro; October 5, St. Christopher's, Richmond; 12, Virginia Episcopal School, Lynchburg; 16, Fork Union Military Academy, home; 23, National Training School, home; 26, Randolph-Macon Academy, home; November 2, Staunton Military Academy, home; 9, Augusta Military Academy, Fort Defiance; 16, Shenandoah Valley Academy, home; 23, Episcopal High School, Alexandria.

Gopher Coach Sees Three Defeats

National Champs to Feel Loss of 'Pug' Lund and 14 Mates.

(One of a series of stories on the prospects of major college football elevens.)

By the Associated Press.

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 22—Minnesota's Thundering Herd, lacking some of its heaviest artillery from the 1934 campaign, when the Gophers swept through to the Big Ten and mythical national championships, is asking no odds this fall in the fight for retention of its titles.

The galloping Gophers, faced with the loss of two All Americans—Francis "Pug" Lund at left half and Frank "Butch" Larson at end—as well as 15 other lettermen, still can place a nearly veteran eleven on the field.

Sees Three Defeats.

Head Coach Bernie Bierman, however, fails to echo the belief of the fans that Minnesota will have another winner.

"We'll lose three games this fall," he predicted. "You can't lose men like Lund, Larson, Kostka, Bevan, Bengtson and Tenner and hope to replace them. Talk of a championship team is rather far fetched."

But the crushing Gophers, with a host of replacements to fill in the graduation gap, indicate they will be hard to beat.

Capt. Glenn Seidel, at quarter, will be flanked by veterans in the back field, with Julius Alfonse at right half, George Roscoe, who takes the place of Lund, at left half and Sheldon Beise at full. At least six other high-class backs are ready for relief duty.

The line will tell the story. Although hit hard by losses, the forward wall still will present a corps of veterans. Dale Rennebohm will be back at center, Vernon Oech and Chuck Wilkinson at the guards, and two giants, Ed Widseth and Dick Smith, at the tackles. The Gophers lost their first four ends, but have two lettermen and several reserves to fill the gap.

Have Tough Schedule.

Undefeated since 1932, although tied four times in 1933, Minnesota faces some rough opposition in the drive to continue the record—Iowa, Northwestern, Purdue, Michigan, Wisconsin, Tulane and Nebraska.

The Gophers lost a lot of the power that pushed over 270 points last season while holding the opposition to 38, but many seasoned reserves, plus a promising group of sophomores, should ease some of Bierman's worries.

The schedule:

September 28, North Dakota State; October 5, open date; 12, Nebraska at Lincoln; 19, Tulane; 26, Northwestern; November 2, Purdue; 9, Iowa at Iowa City; 16, Michigan at Ann Arbor; 23, Wisconsin.

STRANGE as it seems, the oyster is edible any month of the year, despite the old saying that they are not good during months which do not contain the letter "r."

This would make them unseasonable in May, June, July and August. It is by coincidence that these months are the spawning months for oysters and because of this they are likely to be poor in quality and flavor. Laws in many places protect them during this period, but according to the United States Bureau of Fisheries, oysters taken from unpolluted water in any month or season are edible.

Richebourg, born in 1758, never grew to be taller than 23 inches. His small size proved to be a valuable asset during revolutionary times in France, when he was pressed into service as a spy. Richebourg found no trouble at all in penetrating enemy lines surrounding the city—he merely dressed in infant clothes and was carried through by a woman who pretended to be his mother.
